PREFACE

This 1941 edition of the Fiction Catalog contains 5520 titles of the best works of fiction for library use which have been published in English through June 1941. Of these, 5050 titles have been fully cataloged, 200 titles entered in notes, and 270 titles included in omnibus volumes. The total number of titles includes mystery and detective stories, collections of short stories, books for young people, Western stories, and translations from various languages. The Catalog is arranged in alphabetic order with author, title and subject entries in one alphabet. It is a companion volume to the Standard Catalog for Public Libraries.

History. Selection. The Fiction Catalog was first published in 1908 and was issued thereafter in various editions of varying sizes. The 1923 edition edited by Miss Corinne Bacon contained 2350 titles. Miss Bacon also edited the 1928 supplement of 558 titles and the 1931 edition of 2100 titles.

Shortly after the issuance of the 1931 edition, plans were made for a Subject Index to Fiction. Questionnaires were issued by The H. W. Wilson Company and the American Library Association to determine how comprehensive a subject index was needed. It was finally decided to expand the Fiction Catalog enough so that it would serve both as a buying list of the best fiction for library use and as a reference tool including a subject index to fiction. With the death of Miss Minnie E. Sears in 1933, work was stopped on the Fiction Catalog until other publications in more advanced stages at that time could be completed.

In 1938 the first tentative list of over 15,000 titles was sent to each collaborator. This list had been compiled after checking many selected lists of fiction. The collaborators checked this list for titles to be omitted, included, starred, etc. In addition to this first large tentative list, the collaborators checked lists of Western stories, detective stories, short stories and a final supplementary list covering novels published through June 1941. A total of over 20,000 titles was considered and the selection made was based on the votes received, supplemented by an examination of the books by the editors.

The editors greatly appreciate the advice of the collaborators who have given generously of their time to checking several lists, but the editors themselves are responsible for the final selection. A list of the collaborators will be found following the Preface.

Scope. The selection of books included has been made primarily for library use and reflects the point of view of the many librarians who collaborated on the selection. Books have been included even tho out of print if votes for their inclusion were favorable or if it was decided that they were of value because of subject matter. In general it may be stated that the titles included in this Catalog are those found by librarians as worthy to be purchased or to be replaced on library shelves if worn out.

Form of Entry. In 1938 The H. W. Wilson Company began printing sets of Catalog cards for all books that were likely to be selected for inclusion in the Standard Catalog for Public Libraries, the Fiction Catalog, the Standard Catalog for High School Libraries, and the Children's Catalog. Books for which these sets of cards are available are indicated by (W). The (W) cards are made for the original edition, but in most cases can be used for the reprint editions. In order to unify the entries in this Catalog and the Wilson cards the following information is given, as far as possible, for each book: author's name with dates of birth and death, title, publisher, latest copyright date, paging, illustrations, series and price.

The author's real name, when known, has been used in preference to his pseudonym in the majority of cases. Outstanding exceptions are: Bower, B. M.; Eliot, George; Brand, Max; Bridge, Ann. Since it was not possible to examine every book entered, or to check the paging in every edition now available from the publishers, information especially for older titles as to fullness of title and paging was obtained from the books on hand, from those borrowed from the New York Public Library or from Library of Congress cards.

Prices. Editions. Publication Date. The prices given are those of 1941. In order to have the information as accurate as possible, the information about prices and out of print books published in the United States has been obtained in most cases directly from the publishers. For the most recent books, information was taken from the publisher's catalogs in the 1941 edition of the Publisher's Trade List Annual and the latest issues of the Cumulative Book Index. No attempt was made to substitute English editions when a book was reported out of print in this country.

Price and availability of reprint editions is based in most cases on the lists issued January 1942 from the various reprint publishers. Reprints received during the early months of 1942 have been entered. The small-sized or pocket-sized reprints have been given only when no other edition was in print.

In the case of older authors whose works are available in many editions only three or four of the editions most suitable for library use are given, with due regard to price range and size.

The date of publication given is usually the latest copyright date. The publisher listed is the one from whom the book is now obtainable.

For many of the titles notes of periodicals in which such titles were published serially have been given. However no attempt was made to check titles not so indicated with the magazine indexes to locate all those first published serially.

Books for First Purchase. About 1135 books recommended for first purchase particularly in small libraries are indicated by stars on the author entries. These stars were added with the advice of the collaborators.

About 785 titles are marked with a single star (). In addition to these, 350 titles or about one-third of all starred titles are marked with a double star (). This indicates that the books so marked received particularly high votes.

Out of print books receiving very high votes are starred because it was felt it is easier to secure out of print fiction titles than out of print non-fiction titles. It also indicates their value if the library uses this Catalog as a guide in discarding books.

Subjects. Since one of the primary aims of this Catalog was to provide a subject index to fiction, each title included has been scrutinized carefully with this purpose in mind. Beginning in October 1940, Miss Elizabeth Duvall of the Washington, D. C. Public Library spent a year reading many of these books and bringing out the topics that seemed of interest. Her background of experience as reader's adviser made her work in this field very valuable.

The majority of books are entered under three or more subjects, but many have been brought out under ten or more. "Anthony Adverse," for example, has been assigned sixteen subjects. For each story an attempt was made to determine the place where the story was laid and the time when events took place and to present these in the subjects. Since it was found difficult to separate historical novels from other novels of the same period with little historical emphasis, all historical novels and others have been grouped together. They have been divided by period, however, so that historical novels dealing with particular wars or reigns are easily found even if the word "History" does not appear in the heading. The American Civil war, for instance, will be found under United States—19th century—1861-1865. Novels relating to one country have been kept together and subdivided by locality or by city, since it is easier to find all novels about China, for example, under China with subdivisions for Peking, Shantung, Shanghai, than to look under four or more places in the Catalog for such material. In the United States, novels relating to a particular state have been entered under that state with subheadings for cities, wherever the amount of material warranted such subdivision. In general, the headings follow forms used for non-fiction books, but since it is not always possible to enter fiction under such subjects many other headings have been introduced. One of the most helpful guides in the use of these terms was furnished by reproductions of about fourteen thousand cards constituting the tracing list for the subject file of fiction of the Cleveland Public Library. To a great extent, duplication of subject headings has been used instead of "See also" references. Novels dealing with the life of an author have therefore been entered under his real name and also under the subject "Authors." The "See also" references have been made only where such duplication does not exist.

Such broad subjects as "Character studies," "Marriage problems," "Family life," "Adventure," etc. have been given to outstanding novels in these fields. The subject "Love stories" has been used for light reading in which the love element predominates. A few abstract qualities have been used as subjects, but the list of novels under such headings as "Avarice," "Cowardice," "Courage," etc. could probably be greatly increased. A special effort was made to bring out novels of vocational interest, and stories will therefore be found under such headings as "Carpenters," "Physicians," "Nurses and nursing," etc. Novels written to present vocational information in story form are also entered under the heading "Vocational stories." The subject "Literary distinction" used in the former edition of this Catalog has been dropped because it was felt that it was not the province of a list as large as this one to decide on the merits of the books included from this point of view.

Short Stories. The 450 collections of short stories appearing in this Catalog were chosen to form a representative selection for public libraries. The selection made from a separate list of these stories sent out to 17 collaborators, consists of short stories by one author and those by several authors. The term "Short stories," in this Catalog has been defined as collections of three or more stories. Incidents centering about one person are also treated as "Short stories" if the chapter headings permit title analytics being made. Contents have been given for each entry of this type, but the collections have not been analyzed, because the new Index to Short stories, now in preparation by this Company, will consist of author, title and subject analytics for a very comprehensive list of short stories and duplication was voted unnecessary. Each entry in this Fiction Catalog for short stories which will appear in the new index, bears the note "Analyzed in the Index to short stories." All collections by one author or by several authors have been entered under the subject heading "Short stories."

Books for Young People. The author entries for about 835 books are marked "y" as suitable for young people aged 14 to 20. This marking represents a consensus of the opinion of 18 young people's librarians to whom a list of books was sent. Various lists such as the National Council of Teachers of English "Home Reading" and the New York Public Library "Books for Young People," have been constantly consulted for suggestions. The starring was done on the votes on the general list supplemented by the votes on the special list for young people. Therefore the stars on the books marked "y" are not in every case those which received the highest votes from the young people's librarians. Not every book suitable for reading by young people has been marked with a "y," but only those that the collaborators felt were being read and enjoyed by young people today. Those librarians consulted preferred to have the mark on the author entry rather than to list them under the subject heading "Intermediate books."

Omnibus Volumes. As a general rule omnibus volumes containing two or more separate novels which were originally published separately have been entered. 90 such volumes are in the Catalog. These include 269 novels some of which are still obtainable separately.

Sequels. Information about sequels is given both for the novel and its sequel. The relationship between various novels is indicated when the same character or characters appears in them.

Uses. This Catalog will serve several purposes. (1) Use as a purchasing list, showing the best titles for all libraries to buy and indicating by starred titles the books recommended for small libraries and first purchase. For this purpose, full information is given about publishers, prices and editions. (2) Use as a reference and bibliographic tool for circulating and reference workers and for reader's advisers. The full subject work will help locate many novels on various subjects and localities, not readily found elsewhere. The annotations give the general outline of the story and its significance. (3) Use for various educational and literary purposes, e.g. the school teacher might well find this Catalog helpful in recommending books supplementary to the courses they are teaching; writers will find lists of stories on a particular subject. (4) Use for advice in vocational work because many novels are listed under various occupations. (5) Use as an aid in discarding and replacing. This list indicates those novels found best for library purposes. (6) Use as an aid in library schools and training classes in teaching courses in book selection.

Acknowledgments. Thanks are due the publishers who have generously given us copies of books included in this Catalog. Without these books at hand it would not have been possible to give proper annotations and subject entries. The publishers have also cooperated by furnishing information about prices.

Sincere thanks are given to the various members of the staff who assisted in the work, especially to Dolores Ramos who has helped in all parts of the work. We are also indebted for the generous help given by the collaborators and the many librarians who answered the questionnaires.

Without the generous cooperation of the Cleveland Public Library, who permitted their tracing file of subjects for fiction to be copied, the subject work on this catalog would not be so completely done. The Washington, D. C. Public Library has also generously sent us copies of their cards with subject headings which have also been most helpful.

It is planned to keep this Catalog up to date by issuing annual supplements.

"Dramatic tale of one Rudolf Stanislaus, an illegitimate child brought up by ignorant peasants in the hills of Croatia. When it was discovered that he was the son of a young Moravian countess and Prince Rudolf, son of the Emperor of Austria, he was taken by his own family to be educated as befitting a descendant of nobility." Book rev. digest

"One of the most unusual novels of recent years, a story in which the melancholy Slav stalks the Croatian land ruminating on the misery of his people, in which the aristocratic and peasant nature of an Austrian Count Leo Tolstoy strives to find justice and faith for the down trodden and understanding of the rulers. And all of this hungry expression of social idealism is contained in a story as fantastic, bizarre and entertaining as the most blatant of your popular thrillers." Books (N. Y. Herald Tribune)

Grandsons; a story of American lives. Harper 1935 370p $2.50

"A cross-section of contemporary American life; the story of the three grandsons of Anton Gale, a Slav immigrant killed in the Haymarket Riot in Chicago, and his half-Indian wife. Of Jack, the radical, killed in a strike uprising in California—of Andrew, the racketeer, shot down by his successor—and, particularly, of Peter, restless, war-wrecked idealist, with a bent for writing, who died at Saranac. This is, supposedly, the story Peter meant to write, reconstructed from his notes and from memory by the author who is, evidently, using Peter as a medium to explain some of his own beliefs and ideals about America. Considerable profanity." Hunting

Adams, Andy, 1859-1935

* Log of a cowboy; illus. by R. F. Elwell. y Houghton 324p illus (Riverside bookshelf) $2.50

First published 1903. Also available in the Riverside library with illustrations by E. Boyd Smith (Houghton $1.50)

"The journal of a cattle drive, with a herd of several thousand, from Texas through Arkansas and Wyoming to the Blackfoot Agency in Montana. The account is admitted to be an extremely accurate picture of a bygone phase of existence in the Far West." Baker's Historical

The outlet; with illus. by E. B. Smith. Houghton 1905 371p illus $2.50

"The author, who saw the beginning of the custom of wintering Texan cattle in the Northwest, the measure which brought the extermination of the bison and the confinement of the Indians to their reservations, and who had some experience with railway companies and their methods of caring for cattle, and their prices with contractors, and with the Congressional lobbyist has woven all these things into his story." Book rev. digest

Andy Adams' "Wells brothers; the young cattle kings; with illus. by E. B. Smith" (Houghton 1911 356p illus o.p. 1941) is another story of ranch life

And sudden death. Dutton 1940 249p $2

"A tale of murder and intrigue on a liner bound for Honolulu, involving a Japanese baron, Mrs Nordstrom and two former partners of her husband, the glamorous Kay Ford and the dashing detective, Mr Rex McBride." Washington D. C.
 "This story appeared serially under the title 'Homicide Honolulu bound.'"

Adams, Henry, 1838-1918

Democracy; an American novel. Holt 374p $1

"Portrays Washington politics and society in the 1870's. First published anonymously in 1879." Pittsburgh
 "If the action is slow the plot is nevertheless well-defined and the book has great present-day interest because of the close parallel between recent political scandals and those of the time described." Bkl.

Adams, Samuel Hopkins, 1871-

The clarion; with illus. by W. D. Stevens. Houghton 1914 417p illus o.p. 1941

"Two big themes are worked out in Mr. Adams' novel, quackery in medicine and dishonesty in journalism. Hal Surtaine, the only son of a patent-medicine millionaire, comes back to his native town after years of study and travel, knowing nothing of his father's business or its methods. Ambitious to enter on a career of his own, he buys up the 'Clarion' and attempts to run an honest paper. He is fortunate only in having a loyal staff ready to stand by him, for all other forces array themselves against him. The boy is put to severe tests, the most bitter of them that which comes when the inevitable clash with his father occurs and he finds himself facing the alternative of printing the truth about 'Certina, the sure cure' or of abandoning his principles." Addis, E. E.

Crime to music, by Peter Drax (pseud.). Appleton-Century 1939 316p $2

Published in England under title: Tune to a corpse

"The seemingly harmless 'borrowing' of a pearl necklace by a penniless London bounder led to murder, and eventually, to the sentence of the criminal to be 'hanged by the neck until dead.' In this unusual crime story, Mr Drax takes a whole segment of London's underworld, portraying vividly each character of major or minor importance in the tragic drama." Hunting

"Reb Yudel, a poor but devout Jew, lived in Galicia in the early years of the nineteenth century. When it came time for his three dowerless daughters to marry the Rabbi commanded Reb Yudel to roam thruout Galicia in his search for dowries. Richly provided for by his neighbors he set out on his journey, accompanied by the teamster Nuta. The account of their wanderings is spiced with stories, and stories within stories, which the two told each other on their way. The book is translated from the Hebrew, and incorporates much of Jewish history and culture." Book rev. digest

"Little men" continues the story of the "Little women." It tells of the remarkable school that Jo and Father Bhaer founded at Plumfield; a happy rollicking home for boys and girls. Meg's children, Daisy and Demi, and Po's own small boys, Rob and Teddy, are in the thick of the fun and Marmee, Aunt Amy, Uncle Laurie and many other old friends

"A world-famous story of young American life in mid-19th century. Certain characters are said to be based on real people (Miss Alcott's own grandfather, etc.). Though here marked 'juvenile,' the tale is one which makes appeal to the grown-ups as well as to the young. Altogether a masterpiece in its own unpretentious line of imaginative writing." Nield

All men are enemies; a romance; illus. by Rockwell Kent. Doubleday 1933 574p illus o.p. 1941

"The hero, Antony Clarendon, is a young man of the century, a romantic idealist who is bent on attaining a finer, fuller and freer life. His love affair with a beautiful Austrian girl is interrupted by the war. After the war Antony seeks Katha in Vienna, but failing to find her, he allows himself to be led into a conventional and unsatisfying marriage with Margaret. But not for long. Antony finds his lost love and with her, peace and a reborn spirit." Book rev. digest

Death of a hero, a novel. Covici 1929 398p o.p. 1941

"This is a bitter and moving arraignment of that late 1890 régime which brought up its youth in an atmosphere of smugness and prudery, and then thrust them into a devastating war. The first of the book presents the childhood and youth of George Winterbourne against a background of middle-class English life. The second part relates his war experience. When he suddenly stood up in the trench against a terrific machine-gun fire no one knew whether it was suicide or not; and no one cared. The book is a satirical, thoroughly angry, sometimes hysterical, indictment of a so-called civilization. Its frankness will offend many readers, but it is excellently written and an extraordinary work." Bkl.

"The story of a pioneer woman who, as a bride, followed the covered-wagon trail to the Nebraska prairies and lived there the rest of her eighty years. A devoted wife and mother, Abbie Deal brought a large and united family through poverty and hardship. Denying herself that the children might have the advantages her talented youth had coveted, she went through life with 'courage her lode-star and love her guide, a song upon her lips and a lantern in her hand.'" Cleveland

* Miss Bishop. Appleton-Century 1933 y 337p $2

"This portrait of another woman with 'lantern in her hand' is of Ella Bishop, teacher of English in Midwestern College, whose teaching covered a period of fifty years, from the 1880's to the present. With indomitable courage and with little bitterness she struggled along caring for her frail little mother, losing two lovers, bringing up other people's children, and seeing her own hopes retreating into the background. And altho she faced old age with practically no money she had the satisfaction of knowing that she had carried the torch worthily." Book rev. digest

* Song of years. Appleton-Century 1939
y 490p $2.50 (W)

A "love story with its scenes laid in Iowa between the years 1854 and 1865. It tells of the romance of Suzanne Martin, one of a family of seven girls and two boys, with Wayne Lockwood, a young man braving the rigors of prairie life alone. Mrs Aldrich's ability to describe the details of home life under pioneer conditions with sympathy and understanding and to create against that background a group of appealing characters has been repeatedly demonstrated and . . . [this] book is a worthy successor to her earlier novels." Baldwin

"In Illinois, in the spring of 1866, Amalia Stoltz and Mathias Meier met and fell in love. But a dominating father carried Amalia off to the Nebraska prairies in a covered wagon, and although Mathias followed, he arrived too late. The story follows Mathias and Amalia and their descendants, as spring follows spring, and wagon trails become highways—and ends with Amalia's great grandson and Mathias's granddaughter, caught in the depression of 1933, starting life anew on Amalia's old homestead." "Laura Deal, the youngest grandchild of Abbie Deal, the pioneer mother of 'A lantern in her hand,' is a sensitive, talented child who, like her grandmother, must choose between love and a career. During high school and college days, and at the moment of her great decision, Laura feels that the spirit of Abbie Deal is guiding her. This book takes up the story where 'A lantern in her hand' ended, but it can be read as a separate story." Cleveland

Gentlemen—the regiment! by Hugh Talbot pseud. Harper 1933 407p o.p. 1941

"This is the story of two proud military families in provincial England. Bitter enemies as far back as they could remember, they were inextricably bound up with two rival regiments, the 137th and 138th. The Chappells, the more powerful of the two, were hard-headed, irascible and dogmatic. The St. Quentyns, on the other hand, were a milder, more subtle lot. It is principally the story of young Alastair Chappell, who, a sensitive lad, rebelled against the absurdities and the barbaric traditions of his family and its regiment." Books (N.Y. Action at Aquila. Farrar 1938 369p $2.50 (W)

Also obtainable from Grosset at 50c

"The first half of the book deals with the journey, in the fall of 1864, of Colonel Franklin, young commander of the Sixth Pennsylvania cavalry, from Philadelphia to Harrisburg, and then southward on a leisurely horseback trip across western Maryland and down the lovely Shenandoah valley. He was on leave, and the varied and lively incidents of his journey and his conversations with friends and chance acquaintances provide a fresh picture of wartime feeling. On the return to his command at Aquila, he encounters Mrs. Crittenden and her family, whose southern home the Colonel had burned under orders. He provides food and medical service for them and events move to the climax of 'that action at Aquila' as the fierce battle was called. Well written and most readable, though with little plot. Serialized in 'Cosmopolitan.'" Bkl

"A sentimental story of Kentucky in the years following the War of Independence, very delicate in analysis of feeling, and in the emotional use of landscape. The theme is that of an honest and pure affection between a man and a woman separated by marriage. Deals exclusively with the inner life, and is almost devoid of external incident, though the perilous conditions of existence in the colonizing days are brought out by glimpses of Indian warfare." House of joy; a story of stage-life in Holland; tr. from the Dutch by H. van Wyhe. Dutton 1929 284p o.p. 1941

"A teacher of literature living as paying guest in a shabby but distinguished old Dutch home, discovers promise of great talent in the drab little daughter of the house. The teacher arranges for her pupil's first appearance in public and becomes friend and mentor to the fledgling artist. With fear and misgiving she watches the progress of her protégée, thru dubious experiences, to stardom." Book rev. digest

"Jenny is an extraordinarily convincing embodiment of her type, and the portraits of her keenly contrasted fellow-players are achieved with a touch no less masterly and revealing." Sat. rev. of lit.

Followed by "Jenny Heysten's career"

House of Tavelinck; tr. by A. v. A. van Duym and Edmund Gulligan; with decorations by Allan McNab Farrar 1938 738p $3 (W)

"Historical novel with eighteenth-century Holland and France for background. The first half of the story deals with the effect of the ideas of Rousseau and Voltaire upon the Dutch bourgeoisie, and the downfall of the proud Amsterdam house of Tavelinck. The latter half deals with the French revolution and the part played by the eldest son of the Tavelincks in France and in his own country again." Book rev. digest

Map on lining-papers

Jenny Heysten's career; tr. from the Dutch by H. van Wyhe Dutton 1930 260p $2.50

"Continues the story of the lives of the people who figured in the 'House of joy,' especially 'Jenny' and 'Nico.' Pittsburgh

"Notable picture of backstage life. . . There is more than story to this book. There is character portrayal of the finest sort" N.Y. Times

No surrender; tr. by W. D. Robson-Scott. Dutton 1931 320p $2.50

"It is a sequel to, or better expressed an amplification of . . . 'The rebel generation'. . . The main characters are: Clara, daughter of Professor David Cornvelt; Joyce, daughter of David's son, Louis; and Thomas, son of Hein Cornvelt (Cornfelt), who has become an English subject. The book embraces the years 1904-1913." Foreword

A story of the militant suffrage movement in England

* Rebel generation; tr. by M. W. Hoper. Dutton 1928 387p $2.50

"An absorbing chronicle of three generations of the Cornvelts, a conservative Dutch family. The story opens in 1840, when Louis Cornvelt's orphan niece reared in Paris, comes to live with her young cousins, and tries in vain to stir the timid girls to revolt against their father's despotism. In 1872 the girls of the second generation defy parental authority and seek economic independence. The boys and girls of 1923, free from all restrictions, seem as far from happiness as their grandparents." Cleveland

Followed by "No surrender"

Tantalus, a novel; tr. from the Dutch by G. J. Renier and Irene Clephane. Dutton 1930 305p $2.50

"Study of the inconstancy of a well-born, wealthy Hollander, set against the solid structure of Dutch society and the looser morality of New York City." Pittsburgh

"Although not as well constructed as 'The Rebel Generation,' this book shows the author's ability to write a straightforward novel around the emotions." N.Y. World

Mrs Jo van Ammers-Küller's "Apple and Eve; tr. by C. B. Bodde" (Dodd 1933 807p o.p. 1941) is a story of a woman forced to choose between a family and a career

Only a fiddler; a Danish romance. Houghton 309p o.p. 1941
First published in Danish 1837
Descriptions of scenery and customs of Denmark form the background of this lovely story of Christian whose overwhelming desire was to play the violin. His love for Naomi, a Jewish girl with whom he played in his childhood, was the other overpowering interest throughout his life of struggles and poverty. He became the village fiddler, while Naomi followed a life of fashion

Windy McPherson's son. rev ed Huebsch 1922 349p o.p. 1941

First published 1916 by Cape
"The author of this story is a Chicago business man and he knows of the things of which he writes. He knows first of all the Middle-western small town and he writes of it with pitiless honesty, but with understanding too. Sam McPherson, town newsboy, is the son of the town drunkard and braggart. Windy McPherson was one of those men who couldn't settle back into civil life after four years' soldiering, but Sam is his mother's son too and it is the spirit of Jane McPherson in him that carries him to success. Success takes the form of money making and Sam becomes one of the Chicago money kings who came into prominence after the Spanish-American war. But Sam, trained in philosophical thinking by John Telfer of Caxton, cannot be satisfied with this kind of success. He wants to know the meaning of it all. The author is frank in his discussion of hidden evils, but his sincerity should save the book from charges of offensiveness." Book rev. digest

Confessions of a little man during great days; tr. from the Russian by R. S. Townsend. Knopf 1917 242p o.p. 1941

"The book is just the quite shameless confession of a little clerk who gets no nearer the war than Petrograd, a futile, stupid, fussy, egoistic, but affectionate, sensitive, and somehow lovable little man of forty-five, with but one heroic quality, his honesty—at least to himself; he does not spare himself when he writes the diary that no one is to see. . . . He wins your sympathy, from a fellow-feeling, and he keeps it, even when he is worrying about himself and his miserable digestion and his neglected state while his fine wife goes nursing, even when the smallness of his life makes him most ridiculous. . . . Again when he decides to go to the front and serve with the ambulance you believe that he will go and somehow play his little part." Times (London) lit. sup.

"The perfect tribute" on the Gettysburg speech is rendered directly to Lincoln, in a Washington hospital, by a wounded soldier who had read the address in a morning newspaper. . . . "The story of a good man with a touch of greatness who lived life in the effort to light up other lives with the mystical kinship of the human spirit—and who succeeded." N.Y. Times

"It is beautifully written, simple, sincere, thoughtful, but it will be read by the few." Cleveland staff notes

The heroine is a great tragic actress. The story is about her love for a young poet. "It is supposed to be the story of the author's own amour with Duse. . . Its real merit consists in its florid metaphorical style and magnificent descriptions of Venice." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

Triumph of death; tr. by Arthur Hornblow. . . Page 412p illus (Romances of the rose) o.p. 1941

Appeared in 1894

"The tragedy of two soul-sick and world-weary lovers, to whom love is both an intoxication and an obsession, preventing all natural joys and social duties. To solve the problem they kill themselves together. The story presents pictures of death in all its phases, forming an artistic monograph, as it were, of the theme." Miller

The green hat. Doran 1924 350p o.p. 1941

"Reduced to simple terms this is the story of an enduring boy and girl love thwarted, with disastrous consequences, by an overbearing father. The modern, indirect and often illipant manner of the telling conceals the simplicity of the theme. Iris March, the wearer of the green hat, who figures thruout as a de-classée and wanton breaker of hearts emerges at the last as both victim and slave of a love which she cloaked with a mask of recklessness" Book rev digest

"The emotional depths of Jewish womanhood is the theme of this story of two generations, in Poland and on the East Side, by the popular Yiddish novelist and playwright." Pittsburgh
- Mottke, the thief; tr. by Willa and Edwin Muir. Putnam 1935 314p $2.50
First published 1917 under title: Mottke the vagabond
"This novel, translated from the Yiddish, is a story of life in a Jewish village in Russian Poland and in the underworld of Warsaw. . . . In turn Mottke is a blower in a glass factory, a member of a troupe of wandering acrobats, and keeper of a brothel. He is torn between his love for two women, is moved to reform himself for the sake of one of them, is betrayed by her, and in the face of the other's efforts to save him gives himself up to defeat." - * The Nazarene; tr. by Maurice Samuel. Putnam 1939 698p $3 (W)
"A novel based on the life of Christ. The story, set in a framework of modern Poland, is retold from three different points of view. First there is the narrative as a modern Polish Jewish scholar hears it from the lips of one who claims to be the reincarnation of the Roman military governor of Jerusalem. Then there is the 'fifth gospel' written by Judas Iscariot, and finally there is the story as the young Jew remembers it when he realizes that he himself is the reincarnation of a disciple of the Pharisee, Rabbi Nicodemus." Salvation; tr. by Willa and Edwin Muir. Putnam 1934 332p $2.50

"An historical novel of Jewish life in a small Polish community over a hundred years ago. The chief character is Jechiel, who becomes a famous rabbi and is revered by his fellows as a righteous man and a saint." Book rev. digest

"It is a special study of the race that Sholem Asch knows best, a brilliant interpretation of their religious depths, of their psychological compensation for suffering." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Song of the valley; tr. by Elsa Krauch. Putnam 1939 245p $2

"A fictional tribute to those modern Jews who went to Palestine and built for themselves a new life out of swampy land where nothing had managed to live before. It is a pioneer story of hardships willingly endured by a courageous people; the faith of these people in their ultimate triumph produces the effect of a Jewish psalm, unrelieved by humor." Bkl.

"St. Petersburg, Warsaw, Moscow, during three tense periods of the early nineteenth centuries. The moneyed and the working class of Jews are dealt with in a novel, absorbing, powerful, richly creative. Unpleasant at times, it is dramatic throughout." Cincinnati

"As a portrayal of Jewish life it is continuously striking and interesting." Nation

Three novels: Uncle Moses, Chaim Lederer's return, Judge not—; tr. by Elsa Krauch. Putnam 1938 3v in 1 $3 (W) None of the three novels are available, 1941, separately

Three stories of Jewish immigrant life in America. Two have never before been published in English; "Uncle Moses," now newly translated, was first published in English in 1920

"Three Jews are the respective heroes: one back in the sweatshop era; one a more successful clothing manufacturer, retired; one a banker who has tried to forget his Jewish origin. All of them are bewildered and unhappy in a new and strange country. A serious and sympathetic piece of work." New Yorker

Published in England under title: Calf of paper

"Characters from all classes of society appear in this novel of post-war Germany. Interest centers on the speculator, Aron Judkewitch, and on the Bodenheimers, a long-established family of bankers, but in the background are all the people of Germany, torn by factions, with profiteers thriving on inflation while others suffer, with the Jews as the scapegoat, being punished for the humiliation of a nation. Powerful, but often unpleasant. For adult readers." Bkl

* Doctor Serocold; a page from his day-book. Doubleday 1930 305p o.p. 1941

"The story of one day in the life of a family physician of sixty-five in a fine old English provincial town. This detailed record of his relations to patients whom he has known, mind and body, for forty years, is a progressive revelation of the kindness and crotchetyness, penetration, intolerance and deep human sympathy which make up his character." Cleveland

William and Dorothy. Macmillan 1938 414p $2.50

"Exercising the novelist's privilege to go behind the scenes and to make her own deductions, the author has chosen to make Dorothy Wordworth's suppressed love for Coleridge the theme of a story. In it she gives an interesting picture of the little world in which Dorothy, her brother William and his friends were the prominent figures and puts all the imagination and suspense of good fiction and the realism of biography into the tale." Arrogant history of White Ben, by Clemence Dane (pseud.). Doubleday 1939 363p $1 (W)

Toward the end of the war of the 1950's, which had practically destroyed our present civilization, a scarecrow, named White Ben, was set up in an English field by a little girl and an old man. Eventually White Ben became dictator of England and did away with everything based on human reason. A political allegory

The Babyons; the chronicle of a family, by Clemence Dane (pseud.). Doubleday 1928 4v o.p. 1941

"The four books of this novel, 'Third person singular,' 'Midsummer men,' 'Creeping Jenny,' and 'Lady Babylon,' tell separate but related stories. They follow the distressed fortunes of the Babylon family through five generations, beginning with the story of poor frustrated Harlot, whose ghost haunts and whose madness afflicts the family for two hundred years. Very well written, with the atmosphere of each period remarkably well reproduced. Attractive make-up in four small volumes bound in boards." Bkl.

* Broome stages, by Clemence Dane (pseud.). Doubleday 1931 703p o.p. 1941

"The first Richard Broome was born in 1715 and hobbnobbed with a witch. When he fell from the loft of a barn into a group of strolling players who were rehearsing a Mid-Summer Night's Dream, he unwittingly committed his descendants to the theater. For more than two hundred years the Broomes, gifted, spectacular, and charming, ornamented the English stage, and then the last of the family went over to the movies. The story is long, packed with incident and able characterization, and remarkably successful in its portrayal of the unreal world of the theater." Bkl.

Moon is feminine, a tale, by Clemence Dane (pseud.). Doubleday 1938 304p o.p. 1941 (W)

"Brighton in the year 1803 is the scene of this romance of Henry Cope who was young and rich and Lady Molly Jessell who was young and poor. Reality and fantasy are inextricably interwoven and give to the tale an illusive quality." Baldwin

Ashton, Winifred, and Simpson, Helen De Guerry, 1897-

Enter Sir John, by Clemence Dane (pseud.) and Helen Simpson. Cosmopolitan bk. 1928 315p illus o.p. 1941

"A young actress has been convicted of the murder of another actress in the same provincial company. The evidence against her is overwhelming, but Sir John, who attends the trial, takes note of one point which has been overlooked by everybody else and takes it upon himself to prove the girl innocent. Besides being a good detective story, this is an excellent novel of stage life." N.Y. Times

Ancestors, a novel. Harper 1907 708p o.p. 1941

"A long, unequal, exuberant novel of smart society and politics in England and life in California, Mrs. Atherton's wide knowledge and dramatic vigour making the latter far the strongest part of the book. Traces the development of a man with Celto-Saxon ancestors on one side and Spanish-American on the other, but the problem of heredity is complicated by many crossing interests." Baker's Best

Black oxen. Boni & Liveright 1923 346p o.p. 1941

"Countess Zattiany, rebelling at fifty-eight against approaching old age undergoes a rejuvenation treatment and becomes in body and brain a woman of twenty-eight retaining with the romantic interests of her new youth the disillusioned mind of her former age. When the thirty-four-year old columnist of a leading New York newspaper falls in love with her and she returns his love they furnish material for an interesting psychological study. The action of the story takes place among the inner social and literary circles of present-day New York." Bkl.

The Californians. Macmillan 1898 351p o.p. 1941

"Tells with the same sort of exuberant and emotional realism the story of a woman's heart. Magdalena, a daughter of the ancient Spanish owners of the soil, in her lack of natural endowments and in the frankness with which her emotions are analysed, is a Californian Jane Eyre. The cloistered luxury of the rich hidalgo's home, and the effete type of civilization for which it stands, are contrasted with the uncouth, strenuous life of the modern Yankee." Baker's Best the high priest, took a company of Tyrians, men, women and children, and sailed to found a rival commercial town, which she ruled as Queen Dido and called Car-follows the narrative of Virgil and tells of the coming of the Aeneas, the goddess-

 the warrior, and her death in despair after his desertion. An absorbing story with gorgeous background." Cleveland

"A quaint little Provencal romance of the twelfth century, a prose-poem . . . of the sovereignty of true love, the hero a gentle knight of France, and the heroine a maiden of unknown birth, who proves

Most striking perhaps in its grafting of vivid actuality upon pure romance—nothing more realistic than certain passages has come to us from mediaeval literature."

* Emma

- y* Some recommended editions are:
 Macrae Smith co. (Rittenhouse classics) $2 Illustrations in color by C. E. and H. M. Brock Macmillan (Modern readers ser) $1
 First published 1815
 "The heroine is a pretty girl with a feminine rage for match-making." Lenrow
 "Less brilliant than 'Pride and Prejudice,' 'Emma' is equally rich in humor, in the vivid portraiture of character, and a never-ending delight in human absurdities, which the fascinated reader shares from chapter to chapter." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

Mansfield park

The only recommended editions of this title in print, 1941, are those noted at the head

First published 1814

"Presents a houseful of young people in love with the right or the wrong person. Thru the device of marrying off three sisters into different ranks, upper middle-class distinctions come in for amusing comparisons." Lenrow

y Northanger abbey

The only recommended editions of this title in print, 1941, are those noted at the head

First published 1818

"The heroine is a girl in the first innocent bloom of youth, whose entry into life is attended by the collapse of many illusions." Lenrow

"The origin of the story is the desire to ridicule tales of romance and terror such as Mrs. Radcliffe's 'Mysteries of Udolpho' and to contrast with these life as it really is." Oxford companion to English literature

y Persuasion

The only recommended editions of this title in print, 1941, are those noted at the head

First published 1818

"In this, Miss Austen's last work, satire and ridicule take a milder form, the tone is graver and tenderer, and the interest lies in a more subtle interplay of the characters: indeed, it is a matter of tradition that a love-story of Jane's own life is reflected in Anne Elliot's." Oxford companion to English literature

* Pride and prejudice

- y* Some recommended editions are:
 Macrae Smith co. (Rittenhouse classics) $2 Contains twelve colored illustrations by C. E. and H. M. Brock Grosset (Universal lib) $1 No illustrations but satisfactory as to type and binding
 Grosset (Madison square bks) 50c With frontispiece showing a scene from the moving picture production
 First published 1813
 "A history of the gradual union of two people, one held back by unconquerable pride and the other blinded by prejudice; but in spite of little plot, the interest is sustained through the book. The characters are drawn with humor, delicacy, and the intimate knowledge of men and women that Miss Austen always shows." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

* Sense and sensibility

- y* The following edition is recommended:
 Macrae Smith co. (Rittenhouse classics) $2 Contains colored illustrations by C. E. and H. M. Brock
 First published 1811
 "Again satire directed against mere commonplace foolishness. Two sisters of differing temperaments are contrasted." Lenrow

Tolstol, L. N. graf. War and peace

Austin, Frederick Britten, 1885-

Forty centuries look down. Stokes 1936
373p o.p. 1941

"Subtitled a biographical novel, this is a story of Napoleon's Egyptian campaign. He is 28 years old, very much in love with Josephine, but suspicious of her fidelity. This situation is important in the plot, but primarily it is a detailed account of political and military events. Of interest to readers with a decided taste for history." Wis. bul.

Road to glory; a biographical novel of Napoleon. Stokes 1935 349p o.p. 1941

"A romantic historical novel telling the story of Napoleon's first Italian campaign from the point of view of Napoleon alone" Book rev. digest

Austin, Mrs Jane (Goodwin) 1831-1894

Betty Alden; the first-born daughter of the Pilgrims. Houghton 1891 384p $2.50

Sequel to "Standish of Standish"

"Betty was the daughter of John Alden and Priscilla; and from the fact that she was the first girl born among the Plymouth Pilgrims, her career has an especial interest for readers of history. Yet although Betty gives her name to the book, she is not the heroine. The story opens when she is about four years old, and continues until after her marriage with William Pabodie—critical years in the history of the Plymouth colony. . . Mrs. Austin is accurate as well as picturesque in her descriptions of the merrymakings and feasts of the time, and of everyday life of these first settlers." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

Standish of Standish. Houghton 1890 422p $2.50

"Tale of the Pilgrim Fathers and Myles Standish, 1620-27. Love and adventure (the Indians, etc.) as well as the more serious side of those early Puritans." Nield

Followed by "Betty Alden"

Austin, Mrs Mary (Hunter) 1868-1934

Isidro. See note under Austin. Starry adventure

* Starry adventure. Houghton 1931 420p y $2.50

"Story of the slow development of a dreamy, sensitive youth, son of a New England professor seeking health in New Mexico. The country and the background are as important as the character study." Pittsburgh

Mrs M. H. Austin's "Isidro" (Houghton 1905 424p illus o.p. 1941) is a tale of romantic adventure in California in the 1840's

"The Miller family of 'Long furrows' reappear in this book. Lyddy Miller, with untiring ambition and devotion, moves the family to town where the children may have advantages. How the change affects them and how, when hard times come, they are glad to go back to the farm, makes a good story of the homely, homespun variety." Wis. bul.

y Long furrows. Appleton-Century 1935
262p $2

"A simple, pleasant story of country life in the 1890s, centering about young Barbry Miller and her family. Real people, living normal, hard working, but contented lives, have a good deal of fun going to Fourth of July picnics, quilting bees, revival meetings, school exercises, and similar affairs. Readers with any memory of farm life of that period and many without, will enjoy this lively tale. Illinois setting, typically mid-western." Bkl.

"Sela Burchard, who was a schoolma'am but didn't want to look like one, met pioneer life in Oklahoma territory in the '80's with humor, strength, and courage. Her choice of a farmer instead of a cattle rancher for a husband symbolized the change from range country to farm land.
 Though life was hard, there was hope.
 A little more strength and sharpness in the characterization would have made the story more memorable, but it is readable and it may interest young people." Bkl.

"Martha Prawl came of pioneer stock so she was undaunted by the hardships encountered when, with her restless husband Dave, she homesteaded new land in the Cherokee Strip in Oklahoma in the 1890s. Martha's determination to make a home, to induce Dave to work instead of dream, and to bring the children up decently makes a story with little plot." Bkl.

First published 1918 under title: Los de abajo

"This stark and vivid novel of the Mexican revolution and the guerrilla warfare carried on among the various bands of low caste fighters is at once abrupt, slangy, and impressive. Soul of Ann Rutledge; Abraham Lincoln's romance. . . Grosset 322p $1

First published 1919 by Lippincott
"New Salem, Illinois, 1831-35. Largely the love romance of Abraham Lincoln and Ann Rutledge, but also illustrating the future President's early pursuit of knowledge, his free theological leanings, and his first attempts as a political speaker. He is depicted as Captain of a company formed at the time of the Indian invasion (Black Hawk War), and as eventually going into the 'Store business.' Father Abraham; a tale of the last years of Abraham Lincoln. Bobbs 1925 419p o.p. 1941

Sequel to "Man for the ages"
"In 'Father Abraham,' Irving Bachelor gives a picture of Lincoln's kindly paternal attitude toward youth. Tho he does not enter its early pages, his is the figure toward which the thought and affection of all the other characters converge. The story concerns a young northerner, Randall Hope, who leaves the home of his harsh and unsympathetic step-father and wins his way South to the home of an uncle. There is the inevitable clash of ideas between the northern boy and his southern relatives, a clash that is intensified by the imminent approach of war. In the war Randall finds love and adventure. His is a romance with an historical background, dominated by the compelling personality of Father Abraham." Book rev. digest

You haven't changed. Harper 1938 205p $1.75 (W)

"A college reunion at which three classmates meet after ten years is the setting of this short, readable novel. Edith has chosen the intellectual life; Jennifer has married wealth; Sara is the wife of a hard working doctor and mother of three children. The part each unconsciously plays in determining the choice of a young girl, facing the question of what to do with her life, is the coordinating theme." Wis. bul.

A cargo of parrots. Little 1937 181p o.p. 1941

"Ramazani, an exceptional African slave, was entrusted by his dying master, a German naturalist, with the delivery of a cargo of valuable parrots. It is his misfortune to take a ship with a sadistic first officer, who elected to torture the parrots. Then Ramazani arose in his dignity and wrath and killed the man who was interfering with his master's orders." Book rev. digest

y Come summer. Longmans 1936 214p illus $1.75

"This belongs to the class of stories depicting young people's endeavor to make a living and maintain a home. Denise Owen, age nineteen, and Chris, two years her junior, with the three younger Owens, take up their abode on a small farm in New Hampshire. Their first year, marked with many lucky breaks, is successful and they win the approval of Aunt Cora who had opposed the scheme. Interesting episodes and a happy romance will recommend the story to older girls." Bkl.

Darby and Joan. Knopf 1936 223p $2

"The life story of Joan Brendon, whose granddaughter in 1930 viewing an old portrait says: 'How calm you look! The Victorians always look calm . . . because nothing ever happened.' But Joan had suffered early disappointment in love, had made three conventional marriages, and had seen tragedy—in murder and suicide—at close hand. The facts of the story, Mr Baring says, are taken from actual episodes which occurred in Tudor times, transposed to a Victorian setting." Book rev. digest

"A skillfully written story, though tepid. The few enlivening pages are given over to some matchless criticism of acting and several clear discussions of Catholic doctrine." Boston Transcript

Middle passage. Macmillan 1939 410p $2.50 (W)

"A solid, sometimes exciting, sometimes depressing adventure story of the slave trade, based on careful historical research. Though innocent, a young Cornishman is found guilty of wrecking a ship. He escapes to a slaver, becomes mate, and later owner when the captain dies. The details of the slave business in Guinea, the gradual hardening of the hero to its horrors, his final break with everything, and his discovery that he can return to England a free man are related. The reader's interest is in each event as it occurs; suspense is usually lacking. Limited in appeal." Bkl.

Westward passage. Houghton 1931 323p $2.50

"During a return voyage from Europe a woman falls in love with her first husband, from whom she was divorced years before, and they leave New York together. But her ordered, luxurious life with her devoted second husband weighs too heavily against the haphazard ideas of a home and the uncertain income of the distinguished but impractical author." Pittsburgh

Wisdom's gate. Houghton 1938 370p $2.50 (W)

Also obtainable from Grosset at $1. "Picks up the story of 'Years of Grace' several years later. That book ended, as will be remembered, with the divorces and remarriages of the younger generation. This novel takes up that situation as it is working itself out, particularly in the case of Cicely and Albert. The whole matter of divorce and the children of divorce is treated wisely and humanly; seldom has an author been able to write a sequel which appeals to the reader as so absolutely true and right." Tree of knowledge; tr. from the Spanish by A. F. G. Bell. Knopf 1928 329p
o.p. 1941

"Has long been regarded as one of his best works, a rounded and finished attempt to put into fictional form the peculiarly cynical and bitter philosophy which is his own. It is . . . an unsparing picture of life in Spain, of life in medical schools, in a small town and in Madrid . . . It follows the career of a physician . . . [who] eventually finds the fruit of the tree so gall bitter that rather than continue to eat it, he takes his own life. Baroja makes this act a direct protest against the state of civilization in which Hurtado is forced to live." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

"A dramatic and romantic story whose scene is California immediately after the American acquisition. The story, told with considerable verve and color and audacity, revolves around the character of Pancho Delfino, a young Californian of Spanish descent, who refuses to accept the fact of the American conquest and takes to outlawry in protest. Known as the Puma, he organizes a band of desperadoes and proceeds to harass the hated gringos and to befriend his own countrymen. Coningsby. Dutton xxiv, 406p (Everyman's lib) 90c

First published 1844

"Coningsby is the grandson of a profligate marquess. . . His friendships, his social experiences and entry into political life entail a review of the political condition of England (1832-4), and criticism of the misgovernment and undefined principles of the Tories under Peel and their anti-reform manoeuvres." Baker's Best

"Representative of the group of political novels written by Disraeli, afterwards Lord Beaconsfield, who was twice Prime Minister of England under Queen Victoria." Pratt alcove

* Divine lady; a romance of Nelson and Emma Hamilton, by E. Barrington [pseud.]. Grosset 417p 50c

Also obtainable from Triangle bks for 39c

First published 1924 by Dodd

The facts in the lives of Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton "are strictly adhered to and Emma Hamilton's various affairs before her meeting with Nelson form the first half of the story. But its chief interest centers in the episodes at Naples where, as wife of the British envoy, Sir William Hamilton, she met Lord Nelson, became the absorbing passion of his life and was entangled with him in political actions and intrigues between England and the Neapolitan court." Book rev. digest

Duel of the queens; a romance of Mary, queen of Scotland, by E. Barrington [pseud.]. Doubleday 1930 387p illus o.p. 1941

"The beauty and the gentle, loving character of Mary, queen of Scots, are contrasted in this romantic novel with the personality of the 'ugly, redhaired witch' who sat upon England's throne. The careers of Mary, victim of tragedy, and Elizabeth, the arrogant victor, are followed from the accession of each to her throne, to the execution of Mary at Elizabeth's instigation." Book rev. digest

Empress of hearts. See note under Beck. The thunderer

Exquisite Perdita, by E. Barrington. [pseud.]. Dodd 1926 377p front o.p. 1941

"This historical novel is founded on the life of Perdita Robinson, a famous beauty of the late Eighteenth Century. She had the misfortune to possess brains, a conscience, and a worthless husband, which made life extremely difficult for such a pretty lady. This sympathetic study of Mrs Robinson starts at the time Richard Brinsley Sheridan and David Garrick became interested in her stage career and continues through the years when she was mistress to George IV, and then to Charles Fox." The thunderer; a romance of Napoleon and Josephine, by E. Barrington [pseud.]. Dodd 1927 333p illus o.p. 1941

"Napoleon as lover and husband, especially as the lover of Josephine, is the central figure of E. Barrington's novelized biography. His relations with the Bonaparte clan—mother, brothers and sisters—and their attitude toward Josephine are realistically pictured. Napoleon's career as soldier and emperor is presented only so far as required for the background of the romance." Book rev. digest

Beckford, William, 1760-1844

Vathek; with an introduction by B. R. Redman; illus. by Mahlon Blaine. Day xx, 229p illus o.p. 1941

Written in French, 1782. Published in England 1784

"A brilliant medley of Oriental magic and Western comedy. The sultan Vathek, a despot of portentous attributes, whose Court and courtiers are depicted with a mingling of burlesque and Eastern magnificence, commits a series of detestable crimes at the instance of a diabolical Giaour, who leads him at length to the Hall of Eblis, an inferno whose torments are pictured with Dantesque imagination. Beckford hated women, and his female personages are etched in with vitriolic satire." Baker's Best

Cherry tree. Dodd 1932 251p o.p. 1941

"Continues the autobiographical novel begun in Silver Ley. This book opens with the author's marriage and follows the course of one whole year on his Suffolk farm called Silver Ley. The background is the great cherry tree that was the king of the orchard." Book rev. digest

Silver ley. Dodd 1931 422p o.p. 1941

"An autobiographical novel in two parts. Corduroy (separately published in England in 1930) and Silver Ley. The first part tells the story of the narrator's experiences as an apprentice on a farm in Suffolk; the second part continues the story after he takes a farm for himself and brings his family,—mother, brother, and sister, to live with him." Marcel Armand; a romance of old Louisiana; being the story of a Lieutenant of Jean Lafitte's pirate band and of Elbée, Rochelle, a lady of New Orleans, with whom he fell in love and thereby acquired a mortal enemy; illus. by Harold Cue. Page 1935 343p illus $2

"New Orleans during the War of 1812 forms the background for this romantic story. Elbée Rochelle, an aristocratic young belle, is the heroine, and her two lovers are Captain Andre Fournier, an American officer who has secretly betrayed his country to the enemy, and Marcel Armand, a handsome young lieutenant in the pirate band of Jean Lafitte." All brides are beautiful. Little 1936 360p $2.50

"A persuasive story of a young married couple who lived in the Bronx and managed to enjoy each other's company on $25 a week. Peter and Susan saw, among their friends and relatives, plenty of evidence that it is not possible to be happy though married. They determined to be different, and surprisingly enough they were." "In 1881 George Kracha, a Hungarian immigrant, arrived in New York and, shortly after, reached his destination in Pennsylvania where he became a worker in the steel mills at Homestead at 10 cents an hour. A little over half a century later John Dobrejcek, grandson of Kracha, electrician in the steel mills, helped organize his co-workers in the Committee for Industrial Organization. Thomas Bell in his new novel tells the story of the immigrant family through the five decades and makes of it a saga of brave and humble folk that is typically American." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Emerald of Catherine the Great; with illus. by G. K. Chesterton. Harper 1926 218p illus $2.50

"Mr Belloc has written a mystery story 'in which there is nothing to find out'—that is to say, for the reader to find out. The emerald, gorgeous gift of Catherine the Great to the first de Bohun (pronounced Deboon, but at that time plain Bones), a priceless gem, disappears as it is being handed to Marjorie de Bohun on her eighteenth birthday. The guests in the house at the time are a mixed lot—Mr Belloc describes them and Mr Chesterton draws them with a few witty strokes. Each one of them comes into possession of the emerald, and each one with furtive haste palms it off on the next until Mr Collop, the great detective incog., and the parrot Attaboy 'find' the stone." Man who made gold. Harper 1931 296p o.p. 1941

"Farce and satire mingle in the tale that Belloc tells slyly and Chesterton illustrates hilariously. The Home secretary descends to blackmail, a great banker loses sleep, and the gold standard of the world is threatened, all because Professor Charles Lexington, lecturer on electro-chemistry, and author of 'The Flowering of the Atom,' is bequeathed the means of transmuting lead into gold."  April was when it began. Triangle bks. 309p 39c (W)

First published 1939 by Reynal
 "A young man in a publishing office suddenly becomes mixed up with an odd family of scientist father, neglected young daughter, and pseudo-clairvoyant house-keeper. Against his better judgment he goes to live with them, with, of course, romantic results. Unimportant, written in a very light, whimsical vein irritating to some readers but popular with many." Bkl.

"A young journalist tells this story of his association with the Flippany family and his love for Addie, the charming daughter, and of his melodramatic and very unpleasant entanglement with an adventuress which all but wrecks the romance."

Valiant is the word for Carrie. Reynal 1935 292p o.p 1941

"When seven-year-old Paul Darnley stepped thru her garden gate, Carrie Snyder, light lady of one of Louisiana's river towns, fell in love for the first time in her thirty-odd years. A few years later when Paul needed a mother's care, Carrie kidnapped him and with another little waif carried him off to New York. There Carrie abandoned her profession, acquired a cleaning and dyeing business and in time made a success of both the business and the raising of the two children." Book rev. digest

"From the apparently random reminiscences of Gareth Grant evolves the story of the 'titan' James Shore, his ambitious daughter, whom Grant loved, and the part these two strong characters played in Grant's life. A restrained, thoughtful novel presenting the development of the two vigorous American pioneers from Grant's detached, continental point of view. The background is always admirably done, whether it is New York in the 90s, pre-war Paris, or America in 1933. Skillfully written by a leading American poet." Bkl.

These twain. Doran 1915 543p o.p. 1941
Sequel to "Clayhanger" and "Hilda Lessways"

"This is the final volume of the Clayhanger trilogy, carrying on the story of Edwin Clayhanger and Hilda Lessways after their marriage. It is a story told with meticulous attention to detail, a story in which nothing happens, and yet in which everything happens because all the little nothings are of so vast an importance. It is told largely from the viewpoint of Edwin, who lives in a constant state of wonder at the incomprehensibility of Hilda, who balances between irritation and admiration in his attitude toward her, and who comes to see that marriage must be one long series of compromises, and that 'the conflict between his individuality and hers could never cease.'" "Satirical chronicle of the trivial affairs of Lucia, who, emulating a late philanthropist, became involved in the stock market in addition to her usual social rivalry with Elizabeth. Follows 'Mapp and Lucia.' English title, 'Lucia's progress.'" Bkl.

Followed by "Trouble for Lucia"

Benson, Ramsey, 1866-

Hill country; the story of J. J. Hill and the awakening West. Stokes 1928 356p o.p. 1941

"A story of the settlement of northwestern Minnesota and the part James J. Hill had in its development. A typical Swedish settlement is chosen for a background, and with the story of Sven Opsahl, a young Swede who ran a country newspaper and went to the legislature, is entwined an account of the Farmers Alliance, its political influence and effect. . . Awarded the $7500 Stokes Forum prize for a biographical novel." Wis. bul.

Benson, Robert Hugh, 1871-1914

Come rack! Come rope! Dodd 1913 404p $2.50

"Derbyshire, London, etc., 1579-88. Illustrates the religious position in the period just given—the position, that is, as viewed by the able Roman Catholic author. The Jesuit martyr, Campion, is prominent, and Mary Queen of Scots' later period of captivity is an important background to the story. The depiction of Mary's character, and the account of Catholic sufferings, at least supplement—if they do not reverse—the more conventional assumptions of Elizabethan fiction." Nield

Benson, Stella, 1892-1933

Far-away bride; with a foreword by Clifton Fadiman. Readers club 354p $1.50

First published 1930 by Harper. Published in England under title: Tobit transplanted

"In rereading the Book of Tobit, the author discovered 'a curiously exact parallel between the exiled Jews of Tobit's day and that of the exiled white Russians in ours.' Following with some exactitude the outlines of the old story, this new narrative delineates with an ironically humorous yet understanding pen, the characters in an irresponsible Russian refugee family in Manchuria, and the adventures of the son who journeys to Korea, chaperoned by a Chinese gentleman of the Wesleyan faith." N.Y. libraries

Freedom, farewell! Macmillan 1936 484p $2.50

"A novel of Roman society in the last century of the Republic, with scenes in Rome, Gaul, Spain and Africa. It is a story of the downfall of liberty in a great nation, and of Julius Caesar, of Pompey, the general, Crassus, the plutocrat, Cicero, the lawyer-politician, Cato the Stoic, as they intrigued, loved, and battled their way to their several destinies. Action, drama, and social significance so important and timely make it almost a critique of modern times." Ontario library review

"With the struggle between capital and labor in the Yorkshire weaving trade between 1812 and 1931 as her background the author has told a story of six generations of the Oldroyd family, one branch of which were mill owners and men of wealth, the other champions of the oppressed mill workers. The book is long . . . but the thoughtful, discriminating reader will find it well worth reading." Wis. bul.

Modern tragedy Macmillan 1934 435p $2.50

"An absorbing novel of the industrial depression as it affected the textile industry of the West Riding, Yorkshire, and the interrelated destinies of a group of people connected with it. The central figure is Walter Haigh, an attractive but weak young man who falls under the influence of a dishonest mill owner. The deterioration of his character is almost complete when the crash comes, and he experiences a moral rejuvenation. In spite of the title, the book ends on a note of hope." Wis. bul.

The motherless; tr. from the Swedish by C. W. Stork. Doubleday 1924 234p o.p. 1941

"A nature story translated from the Swedish which tells of two equally lonely beings—a boy and a bear cub, both motherless. The scene is set in the lonely north of Lapland. Told with the eloquence of utter simplicity the story brings a realization of the tie that binds the human being and the animal and of their common emotions." Book rev. digest

God's orchid, tr. from the Swedish by E. Classen. Knopf 1924 316p o.p. 1941

"The story is the narrative of a single memorable day in the annals of the little Swedish town of Wadköping. On that day the son of the local magnate, Harold Hilding Markurell, came up for his matriculation. To his ambitious father's fears for the uncertain result of the examination, which was most momentous to him and which he clumsily tried to influence, was added the shock of discovery on the same day that this idolized son was not his own. In the course of the brief drama of this important day, the chief people of the town appear, a rich gallery of types." Book rev. digest

"The scene is a little Italian Court, whither the young adventurer Fabrice has found his way, and in dramatic importance plays second fiddle to the fascinating Duchess Sanseverina and her jealous lover, the astute minister, Count Mosca. The book opens with a famous narrative of the battle of Waterloo. It is a novel that set a standard of flawless technique, of the lucid unfolding of character and motive, of accurate comprehension of the inherent disorder of life, that has rarely been approached in dramatic narration."

Seven keys to Baldpate. Bobbs 1913 408p
o.p. 1941

"Baldpate is an inn, perched high and lonely on a mountain side. In summer it is a scene of gayety; in winter it stands desolate and deserted. But there are seven keys opening seven of the Baldpate doors which, in various ways, come into the possession of seven people who, for various reasons, desire solitude; and they all seek it, by means of the keys in their possession, during the same week in December. First among these solitude-seekers is the young novelist, who, having won a popular reputation by the writing of melodrama, desires to escape from all thought of the adventurous, only to find himself plunged into real melodrama of the most exciting order." The trek over the Oregon trail in the 1850's, the theme of this novel, is woven into a story through the romance of a girl from Iowa and a boy from Kentucky

"The hardships endured are incredible—but so is the heroism. Sickness, death and misery stalk the journey to the end, but there are scenes of sweetness, even of gaiety, to be remembered. The two girls, Nancy Ann and her friend Charlotte, who have moved so serenely thru the story, finding stuff for laughter in the midst of adversity, are left at the end with the hope that each will reach her promised land, and if the one little apple tree that survived will only live—as the great orchards of Oregon seem to prove that it did—the reader may have some feeling that it was all worth while. But what a price to pay!" Wis. bul.

Laurels are cut down. Reynal 1937 332p

"The Pacific northwest and the pioneer spirit that settled that country are scene and theme of this novel. Two brothers, growing up together and sharing the adventures of the free open land, are the central characters. They are of the war generation and are sent off on the fantastic escapade that was America's part in the Siberian campaign. Here George's body is left to become Siberian dust. Alfred returns, to a land that is changed, concerned only with preserving the country for the lumber companies and stamping out communism. A deep love for American ideals, and for this strip of America, pervades the book." Wis bul

"A weak, pleasure-loving artist woos and wins a beautiful Highland girl, and brings her into the hothouse atmosphere of London, where she pines for the air and freedom of her Hebridean home. Ultimately her true and unaffected nature works on his character and makes a man of him. The wonderful colours and changes of sea and sky and mountain in the Hebrides inspire many a descriptive page, and the rich park-lands of southern England, so different in their beauty, are feelingly depicted." But beauty vanishes. Bobbs 1936 375p o.p. 1941

"Sequel to 'Here Lies a Most Beautiful Lady.' Hester Billiter, the heroine of that story, is recovering from her wounds in the London home of her daughter Beryl, at the opening of the book. Pollock, her rescuer, makes a more difficult recovery than does Hester, who takes up the broken threads of her life, and lives for seven years more, until she has seen her daughter settle down a bit from her war hysteria; has seen her son, George, a successful lawyer; and Pollock regain his self-respect during the war." Book rev. digest

Here lies a most beautiful lady. Bobbs 1936 378p o.p. 1941

"Full of delicate perceptions is this study of the way Hester Billiter adapts herself to her dynamic, ambitious, adventurous husband, permitting herself to be carried along in his wake, whenever he suddenly decides to pull up stakes in England or Canada or the Carpathians, lured more often than not by oil. The book has substance, the characters, personality and the reader is held, intent on the more and more complicated relations, and the ups and downs in fortune of Hester and John." N.Y. libraries

Follows the lives of a dozen men and women during the siege and defense of the Alcazar in the Spanish Civil war

"This novel of the siege and defense of the Alcazar follows the lives of a dozen men and women, all fighting in fear and courage, hope and desperation, for something different, property, church, tradition or moral and material security." Washington D.C.

I met a man. Bobbs 1937 277p o.p. 1941

"A story of a friendship between two men in the German army in 1915. One was an officer, out of sympathy with the military caste to which he belonged by birth, the other an American, acting for the English intelligence service. Discovering his secret the officer protected the spy, but the conflicting loyalties of both led inevitably to tragedy." Bkl.

"What is best in this book is the graphic description of farming, and of the motley agricultural population and the whole Spanish countryside; the story is rather forced. - Mare nostrum (Our sea); a novel; authorized tr. from the Spanish by C. B. Jordan. Dutton 1919 518p o.p. 1941
"The mythology and history of the Mediterranean form the rich background for a war novel whose main character, a sea captain, supplies petrol to the German submarines at the instigation of an alluring woman. Thereby he loses his son voyaging to meet him." Bkl.
- Mayflower (Flor de mayo); a tale of the Valencian seashore; tr. from the Spanish by Arthur Livingstone. Dutton 1921 256p $2.50
"The tale deals with the grim battle for existence fought by Valencia's humble fisherfolk. 'The mayflower' has no hero or heroine, in a sense—that is, two men and two women are practically of equal importance in it. All four are caught up and whirled relentlessly toward tragedy for this tale of Valencian life ends unhappily." N.Y. Times
- Shadow of the cathedral; tr. from the Spanish by Mrs W. A. Gillespie; with a critical introduction by W. D. Howells. Dutton 1919 341p o.p. 1941
"A young seminarist brought up amid these influences goes out into the world, and is disillusioned, his religious zeal turning to a hot enthusiasm for science. Imprisoned as an anarchist, he returns a physical wreck to the cathedral, where he is sheltered by his orthodox brother. The story ends in an ironical tragedy." Baker's Best

- Torrent (Entre naranjos); tr. from the Spanish by Isaac Goldberg and Arthur Livingston. Dutton 1921 332p $2.50
"The Brulls were a leading family in Alcira and great things were expected of Don Rafael Brull, who was elected deputy to Congress even before he was of age. But moral courage was not one of his native gifts and he bows reluctantly to the will of a strong mother who steers his course. He yields, however, to his passion for a famous prima donna with whom he has a clandestine love-affair. To be able to enjoy their intercourse in the open, they flee the small town, but the strong arm of the mother reaches beyond the city and Don Rafael meekly returns home to marry the dull daughter of an upstart millionaire and to raise a family." - Woman triumphant (La maja desnuda); tr. from the Spanish by Hayward Keniston, with a special introductory note by the author. Dutton 1920 322p $2.50
"The title in the original is borrowed from one of a famous pair of paintings by Goya in the Prado; it is as if the author were haunted by the very spirit which inspired those portrayals of womanhood. This is the story of a young painter, inflamed with passion for his art, whose life is spent in quest of the ideal woman to transfer to his canvas as an apotheosis of sexual beauty; forced by circumstances to pander to the commercial ends of art, and hampered by the scruples and jealousy of his wife, who fails him as a model, he meets only defeat." Simon & Schuster 1929 401p o.p. 1941
"This richly conceived novel is acclaimed in Romain Rolland's introduction as being written in the tradition of Balzac. In the story of a Jewish family of weavers, the Simlers, uprooted from their native Alsace in 1870, and transplanted in the French village of Venduvre, two problems are interwoven—the problem of the Jew in an alien soil and the problem of the Machine raising Man to riches and power but tyrannizing over and, in the end, devouring him. The unified strength of the Simler clan makes their fortune, but with the sacrifice of their ideals. The Simlers cease to exist except as —& co." Book rev. digest

Down-east duchess. Harcourt 1939 378p $2.50 (W)

"Adele Merriwether appeared in Peaseport, Mass., as a young war widow—this was in 1918—accepted a position as secretary with Beggs Bros. Textiles, and shortly had married Ben Beggs. How this lively and audacious heroine from Maine, who eventually becomes a French duchess, upsets the complacency of this typical New England community makes a readable story." Wis. bul.

"It is a good New England story, located in a well-to-do community, but by no means a photograph of any one town. The people are real New Englanders, with here and there somebody different introduced as a foil. And when Adele, duchess of Pontignac, came back to Peaseport to die, the story has a very appropriate finale." Springfield Republican

My shadow as I pass. Viking 1934 282p o.p. 1941

"Both in the poignancy of the subject and the emotional intensity of the writing, this intimate outpouring of a woman's grief will be painful to many readers. Others will question the taste of such a revelation—the story of the writer's life with William Bolitho, author of 'Twelve against the gods,' thinly disguised as fiction, and told as she relived it while contemplating suicide after his tragic death." The story of five motherless boys who were reared by their father. The period is from 1905 thru the European war of 1914-1918 in which they all saw service.

"Adam Stoddard with grim determination set out to give his sons the education suitable for gentlemen, and to acquire the necessary money. The story of their family life, of the trying days of the World war, and the perverse intrigues of one son's wife, until they are all on the way to a stable maturity and independence, is appealing and human." "A middle-aged French woman whose joy of living is all behind her and to whom there remains little but memory, thankfulness and submission, is made the heroine of a remarkable story, in which the author exposes the cowardice and selfishness of the men and women of the present generation in France in avoiding the responsibilities and duties of life." Mary of Nazareth. Doubleday 1933 305p o.p. 1941

"In this book the author has attempted to reconstruct the life and times of the mother of Jesus, using as accepted facts all that is to be found in the Bible concerning her, her children, their relations with Jesus, and his teachings and miracles. Her thesis is that Jesus' family did not at all understand him and that Mary and her sons believed him to be 'out of his mind'" Book rev. digest

"The time is the period between the seizure of Austria and the Munich crisis. An English girl, stepdaughter of a member of the British Foreign office, escapes from Munich with her Austrian-Jewish lover. "Penetrating study of present-day life in England. Jock Barnaby, under-secretary of state and his wife Sarah had invited a large and assorted party to their country house for the Christmas holidays. Sarah was on the point of leaving Jock to marry an American millionaire; Jock himself was nearly at the end of his resources. The turning point of the story came when Jock very nearly gave away an important government secret to his wife's brother, a scoundrel who would stick at nothing. A shifting of loyalties and a suicide cleared the air and saved the situation." Book rev. digest

Rubè; authorized tr. by Isaac Goldberg. Harcourt 1923 394p (European lib) o.p. 1941

"Filippo Rubè, the subject of this Italian novel, was a born neurasthenic given to paralyzing introspections that marked him for failure. We meet him first at the age of thirty, a lawyer by profession, with a logical mind capable of splitting a hair into four, an oratorical gift and a faith that he could do great things. Without success in his practice and without zest in life he welcomes the excitement of the World war and volunteers at once with some swagger. At the first sign of real danger he collapses in a panic of fear and ever after, in his introspective orgies, alternately denounces himself for a craven and deludes himself into a heroic pose. His standards of life become entirely confused and his career resolves itself into a series of impossible situations." Book rev. digest

"Germany at the time the Nazis were beginning to exert their power, and ordinary citizens had their first taste of the oppression and cruelty of the regime. Professor Roth was a Jew—a gentle liberal whose fame as a scientist was world wide. His stepsons became ardent Nazis but did not save him from death in a concentration camp; his daughter's lover was killed for his communist sympathies, and only by escaping from Germany could the daughter hope to use her medical training. Not a horror story, although the horror is there, but rather a tragedy of human waste and shattered romance." Bkl.

Old wine, a novel. Doran 1925 374p o.p. 1941

"Vienna is the background of this novel dealing with social conditions of post-war Austria. The story concerns itself with the fortunes of the Wolkenheimb family, a remnant of Austrian aristocracy, and the reaction which the loss of the Hapsburgs had upon its several members." Book rev. digest

"The story is written from a sympathetic knowledge of conditions in the time and place described. It is also well written." Independent

* Private worlds. Houghton 1934 342p $2.50

"The scene of the story is a hospital for the insane, and three of the principal characters are psychiatrists; one is the superintendent of the hospital, and the other two, a man and a woman doctor, are his co-workers. Living under the same roof, the insane with their strange fantasies and the sane with their emotional problems inwardly upsetting if outwardly controlled, are revealed as souls alike withdrawn into their 'private worlds.'" Book rev. digest

The author "has here an unusual background which she handles expertly, and she has a situation with all the elements of tragedy. She takes all these elements, and because she weaves through them one of the most charming and idealistic love stories of recent days, she gives us a novel whose essential atmosphere is a happy one." Boston Transcript

"A fine spun, meticulously detailed story of the havoc of inharmonious relationships in a middle-class English family. Portia, orphaned at 16 after a wandering childhood on the Continent, is taken into her half-brother's London home. Eager for affection and friendship, she is baffled by her unresponsive, commonplace relatives, and shocked to find that the young man who is an intimate of the family is a worthless cad. "A group of English people in a winter resort on the Riviera figure in this story which, in its dialogue, is brilliant high comedy; in its character drawing and underlying motivation, a futile tragedy. The central characters are Sydney Warren, an intense and inhibited English girl; Mrs Kerr, a fascinating, selfish widow whose slave and shadow Sydney becomes; Mrs Kerr's son, Ronald, 'a body of genius in the yeasty period of adolescence,' and a young clergyman to whom Sydney flies for momentary refuge when cast off by Mrs Kerr." Cleveland

"This is a story of the South during the Civil war with the hero a soldier in the Confederate army, it is written with a noticeable lack of rancour even in the mention of Sherman's march to the sea. James Fraser is the son of a poor farmer. He loves at first sight the daughter of a wealthy planter, and has just reached the point of confessing his love when the war carries him away. The story follows him on the march, into battle and to a Federal prison from which after two years he is released to return to the broken South and the girl he left behind." Book rev. digest

"A story of the frontier along the Ohio river and between Pittsburgh and Detroit in the twenty-five years before and during the Revolution. It recounts the life and adventures of Angus McDermott, a trader and scout in the service of the British." Outlook

"A stirring tale of the Colonial frontier in the days following the Revolution when the Indians were being pushed out of Ohio by the westward march of the pioneers. Among the characters are Lord Dunmore, Simon Kenton and 'Mad Anthony' Wayne." Cleveland

"It has remained for Thomas Boyd to write the least partisan and the most brilliant of doughboy reminiscences. Mr. Boyd has recorded as nearly as he can recall it, and without grinding an axe or proving a thesis, the physical and spiritual progress (or it is retrogression?) of a normal youth, an enlisted man in the marines, neither holier nor viler than the run of his comrades." Death of a man. Harcourt 1936 321p o.p. 1941

"A story of the love between a neurotic young American woman and an Austrian doctor, a Nazi enthusiast, whose devotion to his cause finally wrecked their happiness. The descriptions of mountain skiing, of the lighting of the flaming crosses at night on the Austrian border mountains, and of the children and the nuns in the town hospital are exceptionally well done. Somewhat mystic at times and sophisticated." Bkl.

Kingdom coming. Harper 1933 319p o.p. 1941

"The story is laid in the Negro quarters of a Louisiana plantation while the white folks were having a war. Chiefly it is the story of Grammy (short for Telegram), a lively boy who had been brought up among 'quality folks' and was proud of his manners. When his master rode off to war, Grammy was left in charge of the plantation. Gradually the Negroes drifted away and Grammy too became restless. He started down the river to New Orleans, but instead of finding freedom he was thrust into a Negro concentration camp." Book rev. digest

"Readers who liked Peterkin's 'Black April' will enjoy this vivid portrayal of plantation life, with its savagery and superstition, its loyalties and defiances. Didge and young Jack are vigorously real, and the tragedy of civilization is strikingly painted through its influence upon them." Wis. bul.

"A series of interwoven family sketches which show the types of white people that existed in western Tennessee during Civil war times—the upper classes who worked towards security, respectability, and local fame, and the poor white trash with their rough, uncouth language, their disregard for human life, and unique ideas of morality and justice. The Civil war is a relatively unimportant factor in the book. A lusty novel, lacking in plot, but full of local color and dry humor. Its frankness may offend some readers." Bkl.

Old Chicago; decorations by E. C. Caswell. Appleton-Century 1933 4v in 1 $2.50

Contents: The fort; The duel; Debt of honor; Metropolis

"The first of these four stories is a vivid picture of Fort Dearborn during the days just before the evacuation, in which the story centers around an English fugitive from justice. In the second, 'The Duel,' the straggling village is seen thru the eyes of a young New England bride who, to her own consternation, finds herself falling in love with a brilliant and cynical French trader. In 'A debt of honor,' the third of the series, the social life of the young city from 1858 thru the civil war is mirrored in a story of rivalry between two sisters, while in the last, 'Metropolis,' the years between '65 and the Columbian exposition pass in review thru an old man's memories." Even after his marriage to Kay, Richard found there were difficulties to be worked out, and that he and the two women who loved him made a 'pattern of three.'" Book rev. digest

"An expertly written novel of manners in 1905. A well-bred English girl in 'reduced circumstances' becomes governess to a child in a large, sprawling family of the Italian minor nobility. A genteel Victorian upbringing does not enable the governess to cope with romantic love or the Italian temperament. The ninety-nine-year-old Italian grandmother straightens things out with wisdom and tact. Very entertaining." New Yorker

Four-part setting. Little 1939 447p $2.50 (W)

The setting for this novel is laid in China. The story is an intricate emotional and psychological problem centering on four English people

"The emotional problems of Rose Pelham, who went to visit her cousins in Peking when her marriage proved unsuccessful, are the main theme. An affair with an experienced amorist, an expedition into the mountains, and the development of a real love for her cousin Antony led to many complications. Told in smooth, sophisticated writing with fair characterization. As in the author's 'Peking picnic' the Chinese scene is excellently presented." Bkl.

"Amber Harrison, young, pretty, and suffering after an unhappy love affair, goes out to Peking to spend a year with an uncle and aunt. There she is drawn into the gay life of the legation crowd, and attracts two men, one a poet, the other a horse-lover. When her year is passed Amber has grown in character and knowledge of life and in willingness to accept what it has to offer." Book rev. digest

"A delightful tale . . . of an Englishwoman, a talented painter, who, puzzled and hurt by the attitude toward her of husband and children, runs away to Dalmatia to think things over. Introduced into the story which the author holds skilfully in suspense, are a friendly psychologist and a young artist protege, both of whom contribute to her understanding of herself and her family. The loveliness of Dalmatian flowers, villages and mountains so faithfully depicted here, reflects doubtless the author's own enchantment with the scene." N.Y. libraries

First published 1932 by Little

"A group of people from the British and other legations in Peking, and several guests, set out light-heartedly one spring for a week-end picnic in a distant and ancient temple, now magical with surging waves of blossoming trees. Swift changes in relationship and in character are subtly suggested as the events of each day mount to a sudden, dramatic climax, and as each perplexed individual gravitates for advice to Mrs Leroy, an intelligent generous-minded Englishwoman, unafraid yet deeply experienced in life. Not least of the book's charm, and it is great, is the revelation of the alien beauty of the Chinese setting." N.Y. libraries

 Boy grew older. Putnam 1922 291p o.p. 1941
 "The editor of the glorified sport column . . . marries Maria Algarez, a Spanish dancer who deserts him after the birth of their son, leaving the upbringing of the boy to the young father and in spite of his appalling inexperience he manages to make a pretty good job of it. The story is told with startling candor, and at times rather bald simplicity, with rich humour and seemingly involuntary pathos." Cleveland

 Old crow. Macmillan 1922 534p $2
 "A penetrating study of New England character, concerned especially with the soul progress of Richard Powell, and how it was helped or hindered by three women: Anna, his first wife whose master-

fulness handicaps him even from her grave; the youthful Nan, lovely of soul and body; and Tira who looked like an old master's vision of the Virgin, yet exercised that 'ancient lure that makes men mad.'" Cleveland

The Willoughbys. Appleton-Century 1935 309p o.p. 1941

"Mrs Willoughby, efficient, active housewife and manager, had gone abroad, leaving her husband and daughter alone for the summer. He was a gentle, elderly clergyman, just retired and trying to reconcile himself to life without a pastorate; his daughter was a school teacher treasuring an almost hopeless love for an absent man. The story of their adjustments to their own fate, while they attempted to help a half-crazed girl whom the parson had taken into their home, is quietly told and religious in tone." Bkl.

"Because his ardent abolitionism is too strong meat for his New England neighborhood, John Stafford decides to go West and make a fresh start. With his three lively boys and his vivacious, indomitable daughter, Mercy Rose, he settles in Illinois and starts to publish the Bakerstown 'Clarion.' His fiery anti-slavery editorials attract Lincoln, and the backwoods lawyer becomes a constant visitor and a true friend in time of need. The value of this exuberant story lies in its portrayal of an ideal relationship between father and daughter, and its human picture of Lincoln before he entered politics." Cleveland

Firemakers, a novel of environment.

Coward-McCann 1931 380p $2.50

"Hating his work in a coal mine, and longing to make beautiful pottery, Luke marries the wrong woman and loses his first chance to break away. When his next opportunity comes the venture is a failure. But Luke takes his ideals back to the mines, determined that his son shall never be a slave to coal. A good picture of life in a coal mining town in southern Ohio." Cleveland

Karl and the twentieth century; tr. by Eden and Cedar Paul. Morrow 1933 312p o.p. 1941

"The tragic life of Karl, a young Austrian of the poorest class, who escaped death in the war but committed suicide thirteen years later, a victim of starvation and unemployment, is the story of a man at the mercy of economic forces, buffeted and finally defeated by circumstances he can neither understand nor control. Throughout the book is a running comment on the world forces—economic, political, and social—which brought about the conditions through which Karl struggles. Powerful in effect, but sordid and in parts extremely unpleasant." Bkl.

Published in England under title: "Twentieth century tragedy." Awarded the Julius Reich prize

Radium, a novel; tr. from the German by Eden & Cedar Paul. Random house 1937 480p o.p. 1941

"Beginning with the early story of the Curies and their—principally Marya's—discovery of radium [the book] proceeds through a story of other (fictional) characters to develop the effects of that discovery upon the world. On one side he follows the therapeutic uses of radium in the cure for certain types of cancer into the clinic of an English doctor, George Purvis. On the other the Belgian banker Pierre Cynac involves us in an examination of the methods of big business whereby the price of the most precious of all metals is controlled until it becomes almost unobtainable." y Courts of the morning Houghton 1929 384p illus maps $2.50

"Richard Hannay and his friends arrive in South America in time to be involved in a revolution which is full of plots, intrigues, excitement and romance, set against a background of 'great frozen mountains and sinister tropic forests.'" Ontario library review

Dancing floor. Houghton 1926 286p $2.50

"A recurring dream—repeating itself once a year on a certain date, each year with a sense of some impending fate coming nearer and nearer—is the central thread in the fabric of this well told story. Opens in England and moves to Greece, with a heroine of a provocative modern type who first inspires dislike, later admiration." Wis. bul.

Free fishers. Houghton 1934 310p $2.50

"The Free Fishers was a secret organization of Scottish fishermen who at various times during Scotland's history made use of their secrecy in divers ways. During the Napoleonic wars, however, they were enlisted on the side of England and performed deeds of espionage and rescue. This romantic tale relates the course of one rescue—of a young woman caught in the toils of an enemy of England—and centers in the part played by one Anthony Lammas, sometime member of the Free Fishers but now a licensed minister of the Kirk and a professor of theology." Book rev. digest

Gap in the curtain. Houghton 1932 313p $2.50

"Gathered at an English country estate, a group of guests learn from a German scientist a secret bordering on television, by reason of which they are enabled to secure a momentary vision of some phase of life, one year before it occurs. The book describes the manner in which the various characters profited by their 'advanced information.'" Ontario library review

Greenmantle

In Buchan, J. 1st baron Tweedsmuir. Adventures of Richard Hannay v2

y House of the four winds. Houghton 1935 309p $2.50

"The scene of the plots and villainies is the fictitious country of Evallonia, where the situation promised to wreck the peace of Europe unless the quarrels of the various parties of monarchists, communists and the youth movement (called 'Juventus') could be settled satisfactorily. Followed by "Castle Gay" and "House of the four winds"

y John Macnab. Houghton 1925 298p map $2.50

"Sir Edward Leithen, Mr Palliser-Yeates and Lord Lamancha are very much bored with life. The doctor advises each of them to go after a little excitement and danger, some kind of a sporting crime, perhaps. They hit on the very thing. Three letters are sent to the owners of three closely guarded Scottish estates stating that at such and such a time the undersigned, John Macnab, will poach on their property, despite all efforts to stop him. For the sake of his position no one of the three men can afford to be caught as a poacher, so there is plenty of the spice of danger in the plan. The owners take up the challenge and double their watch. But with the help of Benjie Bogle, the indispensable small boy who repeatedly saves the day the three-in-one John Macnab more or less wins the wager and certainly sheds dull care." Book rev. digest

y Man from the Norlands. Houghton 1936 292p $2.50

Published in England under title: Island of sheep

"Romantic story of adventure sceneed on the Norfolk marshes, the hills of Rhodesia, and the Norland Island of Sheep. Sir Richard Hannay of 'Greenmantle' with his friends Lombard and Lord Clanroyden, as well as his young son Peter John, come to the aid of Valdemar Haraldsen and his young daughter Anna. The final battle in this game of wits takes place on the lonely island somewhere north of Scotland, where stands Haraldsen's great stronghold of stone and timber." Book rev. digest

"Mr Buchan conceives, in Path of the King, an imaginary ancestry for Abraham Lincoln, concerning whose real lineage little is known. Among these Lincoln ancestors Mr Buchan has the son of a Norman chieftain, a Norman knight who fought under Duke William, a French knight, a high-born lady who was Jeanne d'Arc's friend, a supporter of Cromwell, and a soldier of fortune under Marlborough." An attractive new edition of a book which appeared in 1910 under title: "The great diamond pipe"

"David Crawford, dispatched by a Scotch mercantile concern to take charge of a store on the high velt in South Africa, is the shrewd hero of this tale which abounds in adventures that attend the foiling of a Kafir rising. Usually a romance is compounded of love and adventure; this one is unique for its absence of love. There is not so much as a woman's shadow across its pages, with the possible exception of the mother's hand that administered to the hero sharp chastisement at the end of a youthful escapade. The story is a spirited one full of action and atmosphere." Book rev. digest

"Once more Sir Richard Hannay of 'The thirty-nine steps' and 'Greenmantle' returns to action. The war is over and he is living peacefully at Fosse Manor with his wife and little Peter John. He has fully made up his mind never again to leave his quiet country home when he is suddenly jolted out of his peace and quiet by a strange happening. This is the simultaneous disappearance of Adela Victor, a charming and wealthy young American, Lord Mercot, a young Englishman, and little ten-year-old David Warcliff. With nothing but a bit of doggerel for a clue Richard starts his search which leads him to Norway and the depths of London and into the realms of hypnotism." Book rev. digest

y Witch wood. Houghton 1927 352p $2.50

"Pagan rites and superstitions which impinge upon Christian beliefs and practices form the structure of this novel. The scene is laid in Woodilee, a dour little Scotch village of three hundred years ago. The story recreates with grim reality the village's sanctimonious exterior and its weird orgies of pagan worship in the ancient Black Wood. It is a vigorous account of old Scottish ways and customs written with understanding. The dialect may be a stumbling block to some readers." Bkl.

"This is not the ordinary story of the conflicting claims between career and home. Susan Gaylord could have managed with ease and made all the necessary adjustments. It was the others who could not adjust themselves. 'Susan is different,' they had been saying from the time of her childhood, and they resented this difference, feeling that she gave only part of herself. It is this factor that enters into her relations with the two men she loves and marries, and when a choice must be faced it is her genius that wins. . . . Ran serially in 'Good

"The plot—concerned with the marriage of a Wyoming ranchman, son of an old Philadelphia family, and a New York chorus girl—sounds romantic, but the novel is essentially one of ideas." Wis. bul.

Entertaining the islanders. Scribner 1933 458p $2.50

"The love story of two very modern and likable people who distrusted the idea of a major passion and who are caught in the old, irresistible romantic trap. Largely untroubled by any financial difficulties, they grope their way to a satisfactory solution against the background of a glamorous West Indian island." N.Y. Times

Interpreter's house. Scribner 1924 445p o.p. 1941

Gulian Eyre, youngest son of a wealthy New York family, has come to the point where some sort of interpretation of life has become his imperative need. At 35 having served through the war, having made a serious attempt to orientate himself by writing poetry and taken a less serious dip into the diplomatic service, he comes back home. His readjustment into the warp of family, business and social claims; his inner drive toward some satisfying answer to the eternal query—"Is there beauty yet to find?"—And certainty"—are the themes of the book

Erewhon; and Erewhon revisited. Modern lib. xxxvii, 622p 95c

Also available from Dutton at 90c
 "Erewhon" was first published in 1872. "A fabled account of the author's visit to Erewhon, a land shut off from the rest of the world and inhabited by a curious race. Essentially a satire on human foibles. Excellently written." St Louis

"Erewhon revisited twenty years later," first published 1901, continues with the son of the discoverer of Erewhon telling "the story of his father's return in 1898 to that mysterious country behind the mountains, to find that the Erewhonians have defied him as a child of the sun. Not so sustained a satire on modern life and thought as an adventure story of the Rider Haggard type." Cleveland

Cream of the jest; a comedy of evasions; with an introduction by Harold Ward; illus. by F. C. Papé. McBride 243p illus $5

First published 1917

"The pendulum of the story swings between the two existences of Felix Kennaston. In one, as Kennaston, he lives a life that 'his body is shuffling through aimlessly.' But as Horvendile, the hero of his own book, the dreamer, 'he lives among such gallant circumstances as he had always hoped his real life might provide to-morrow.' The delicacy of touch and the classic atmosphere of the dream episodes give charm and distinction to the tale." Book rev. digest

Domnei; a comedy of woman-worship; illus. by F. C. Papé. McBride 252p illus $5

First published 1913 under title: Soul of Melicent

"A romance in which three persons, Perion of the Forest, Demetrios and Melicent, betrothed to King Theodoret, vie with each other to prove their standards of pride and honor. Especially in the final recognition by Perion of the spiritual quality of Melicent, transcending the physical beauty that lured him and other men, Cabell rises to at least a partial understanding of the medieval worship of 'the lady' associated with the adoration of the Virgin." A. H. Quinn's American fiction

Figures of earth; a comedy of appearances; illus. by F. C. Papé. McBride xxi, 274p illus $5

First published 1921

"By holding his tongue and never thinking, the swineherd Manuel wins 'a dreadful name for impenetrable wisdom and for boundless resource,' and becomes Count of Poictesme and the beloved of queens who are mighty magicians. But like Jurgens, that other impersonation of realism, he cleaves stolidly to his fellow-drudge, the homely Niafer. In short, through all the pseudo-medieval and mythological extravagance, the oceans of fee-faw-fummery, the smartness and self-conceit, this is a simple allegory of human life and the quest for beauty, success, happiness—futile, since man is the sport of the unknown, and to attain his will does not content his desires." Baker's Best

Sequel to "Jurgens" and followed by "Silver stallion"

* Jurgens; a comedy of justice; illus. by R. F. Coyle. McBride 368p illus $5

First published 1919

"The tale, which tells how Jurgens, a poet and pawnbroker, entering the cave on Anneran Heath in search of his wife, Dame Lisa, meets a centaur named Nessus who transports him to the garden between dawn and sunrise, finds his lost love, is permitted to relive a year of his youth and has other adventures, is made up of chapters with such titles as: Why Jurgens did the manly thing; Showing that Serada is feminine; Old toys and a new shadow; Why Merlin talked in twilight, etc." Book rev. digest

Followed by "Figures of earth" and "Silver stallion,"

* Rivet in grandfather's neck, a comedy in limitations. McBride 1915 368p o.p. 1941

"Returns to modern times and a romanticized Virginia. An American colonel, with a pedigree, and his pretty wife are given the rôle of Hans Andersen's chimney-sweep and the shepherdess." Baker's Best

Silver stallion; a comedy of redemption; illus. by F. C. Papé. McBride xxv, 359p illus $5

First published 1926

"This volume completes the trilogy begun with 'Jurgens' and combined in 'Figures of earth.' It recounts the events that took place after the death of Dom Manuel—how Poictesme fell under the rule of Queen Niafer and Holy Holmendis, how Dom Manuel's passing became legendary, and how strange things befell the champions of the Fellowship of the Silver Stallion. Like its predecessors, the book is brilliantly satirical." Bkl.

Rise of David Levinsky, a novel. Harper 1917 529p $2.50

A Russian Jew who came to America in 1885, at the age of 20, tells his own story. About 80 pages deal with ghetto life in Russia, the rest with America.

"The tale of Levinsky is, incidentally, the tale of the cloak industry in this country; of the methods by which a dominating personality achieves his financial success. It is written with a clarity that is French, a chaste realism that is Russo-Yiddish, and a deep human insight that renders it universal." N.Y. Call

The Christian; a story. Appleton 1897 540p o.p. 1941

"A popular romance. For the most part the scene is laid in London. The main characters are Glory Quayle, the granddaughter of a Manx clergyman, and John Storm, the son of a nobleman and nephew of the prime minister. Glory has actor's blood in her veins; John is a religious enthusiast. . . The details of London life are spectacular and the object of the book seems to be to show the inadequacy of London churches to save the city." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books.

First published 1932 by Scribner

Also obtainable from Grosset at $1 "Story of a degraded poor-white Georgia family living in a tumble-down shack on worn out land which had once been the prosperous tobacco plantation of Jeeter Lester's grandfather. The story carries this family some steps further in their progressive degeneration." Book rev. digest

"Mr. Caldwell's humor, like Mark Twain's, has at its source an imagination that stirs the emotions of the reader. The adolescent, almost idiotic gravity of Mr. Caldwell's characters produces instantaneous laughter and their sexual adventures are treated with an irreverence that verges upon the robust ribaldry of a burlesque show." "A sequel to the 'Dynasty of death' . . . carrying on the story of a great munitions family. Jules Bouchard, dying in November, 1918, thinks to himself that 'the world will be a very exciting and profitable place during the next two decades. It was too bad that he would not see it.' This is the story of those two decades, and of the next generation of Bouchards, vying and scheming among themselves in a manner very like that of nations." Wis. bul.

Earth is the Lord's; a tale of the rise of Genghis Khan. Scribner 1941 550p $2.75 (W)

"An imaginative recreation of the world, the loves, and the times of Genghis Khan up to the point where he achieves world power." Hunting

"Genghis Khan, the Mongol chieftain, is shown extending his domain step-by-step, making use of everyone—family, friends, and enemies, to consolidate his power, and dreaming at last of world empire. The novel is an impressive picture of the grandeur and cruelty of the barbaric nomad world, and of its obsessed dictator." Bkl.

day but which can learn from men and can be exploited as cheap labor. These animals, called newts, are used unmercifully by industrialists but are encouraged to increase in number until they greatly outnumber humans. When they need more coast line for existence, they revolt and begin to destroy continents. An incisive satire on contemporary conditions which as a straight story produces a remarkable illusion of reality." Bkl.

Carr, Mrs Lorraine

y Mother of the Smiths. Macmillan 1940 296p $2.50 (W)

"The story of Sabe Smith, mother of six sons, wife to a good-tempered useless dreamer. From Texas to Taos, New Mexico, they come, to find themselves vastly outnumbered by their Mexican neighbors, and with the envious, malicious Nolans next door and the white doctor, drunk when most needed, as their only white friend. But Sabe makes a place for herself, she brings up her small brood against all odds, she wins the education she demands for them by sheer grit" Kirkus

"This homely, pioneer tale has a delightful flavor with its contrasts between the energetic Sabe, her dreamer husband, the easy going Mexicans, and her malicious neighbors. Many readers will enjoy its sentiment, humor, and vivid background." Bkl.

"Compellingly engrossing novel, portraying with satire, humor and terrific realism a tensely critical situation in a British protectorate in Africa. Aladal, a young native, educated at Oxford, returns home, aspiring to become chief of his people.
He finds other aspirants, and the English Resident wavering in his support. The native political pot boils over into strife and bloodshed, a powerful ju-ju priestess performs violent and horrifying deeds, there is a native women's war, and there is bad feeling, even tragedy among the English, muddling along with their usual ineptitude. Brilliant in interpretation of native psychology, and striking for its color, suspense, and atmosphere. Gruesome scenes may repel some readers."

* Death comes for the archbishop. Knopf 1927 303p $2.50

- y "Tells how a young man, Jean Marie Latour, once a seminarist in Auvergne, rode with difficulty into the newly erected territory of New Mexico as Vicar Apostolic and of the wise and good works he wrought there for many years, until, mourned by all his people, 'the old Archbishop lay before the high altar in the church he had built' . . . The love of these two men [Father Vaillant and Father Latour] for each other, for their God, their church, and their body-breaking and often heart-breaking tasks . . . makes of this book a grave, uplifting hymn to spiritual beauty." Sat. rev. of lit.

* Lost lady. Knopf 1923 173p $2

- "Miss Cather's version of the loveliness whose appointed task it is to include virtue as the whole includes the parts, and whose failure to be born with the strength for this high destiny is the supreme tragedy." Atlantic's bookshelf

* Lucy Gayheart. Knopf 1935 231p $2

- "The people of Haverford knew Lucy Gayheart by her swift and joyous walk. When she came down the street of the little Nebraska town one knew she was delighted with everything." Lucy was studying music and giving lessons in Chicago and it was there that she met the middle-aged singer, Clement Sebastian, and became for a time his accompanist. The book gives a delicate portrayal of Lucy's love for Sebastian, and the tragic ending of that part of her life, with its effect upon her." Book rev. digest

* My Antonia; with illus. by W. T. Benda.

- y Houghton 1918 418p $2.50
"Story is told by a New York lawyer who reviews his Nebraska boyhood days and his friendship with a young Bohemian girl, the strong and simple Antonio Shimerda, who is the central figure of the novel. A convincing picture of pioneering conditions and of America's assimilation of the immigrant, and a fine portrayal of character." N.Y. state lib.

My mortal enemy. Knopf 1926 122p $2.50

- "Appeared as a short story in 'McCall's magazine' for March 1926. Is the story of a woman who renounces wealth for love and becomes embittered." Wis. bul.

* O pioneers! Houghton 1913 308p $2.50

- y "Walt Whitman's 'Pioneers, O pioneers!' furnished the title, and something of Whitman's vision inspired the book. It is a story of Swedes, Bohemians and French winning the almost untamable Nebraska prairie land in the face of difficulties and inexperience. The land itself, 'the Divide,' is made almost a character in the narrative and supplies that sense of conflict with the elemental forces of life which is essential to real tragedy. It is written with sympathy and power, compactly and with perfect restraint." Pittsburgh

* Obscure destinies. Knopf 1932 229p $2

- y Analyzed in Index to short stories
Contents: Neighbour Rosicky; Old Mrs Harris; Two friends

One of ours. Knopf 1922 459p $2.50

- "A spiritual biography of a young American brought up on a Nebraska farm, with a mediocre education, married to a prim and passionless wife, living a life which he could not make seem real until the war saved him and gave him something big to do that seemed worth doing." Pittsburgh
Pulitzer prize novel for 1923

Professor's house. Knopf 1925 283p $2.50

- "When Professor Godfrey St Peter won the 'Oxford prize' with his eight-volume history, he built a new house, only to find that his heart remained, with his memories, in the old one. A novel of subtle delineations in which there is a story within a story, told in retrospect." Bkl.
"Professor St Peter is rather a spirit than a man. He is a spirit saying good-bye to something much larger than the ugly old square domicile in which his life work was accomplished. He is a spirit reluctantly bidding farewell to a generation of American life, of a vanishing order of civilization." N.Y. Tribune Appeared serially in "Colliers"

* Sapphira and the slave girl. Knopf 1940 295p $2.50 (W)

- The chief theme of this novel is the subtle persecution of a beautiful mulatto slave girl by her jealous and invalid mistress. The setting is the Virginia countryside just before and after the Civil war

* Shadows on the rock. Knopf 1931 280p $2.50

- y "In this quiet book, one steps back three and a half centuries, and shares, through the glowing magic of a deeply understanding prose, the life of the French colony, dwelling on the gray mountain rock, 'Ke-bee.' Characters, historic or imagined, are finely created, and the aspect of the rock itself, with its fortifications and churches, its convents and gardens, the mighty St Lawrence glittering at its base, is lovingly portrayed through the changing seasons." N.Y. libraries

* Song of the lark. Houghton 1915 580p $2.50

- y "Follows the development of a crude Swedish girl from her childhood in a Colorado desert town to her success as a great opera singer. A story reproducing faithfully and with great naturalness, character as developed in places and situations which are distinctively American." Cleveland

"When Richard the Lion-heart was returning from the second crusade, he was shipwrecked and swam to the land of the Duke of Austria, his sworn enemy. There he was hired as a turnspit at the Golden Knight inn, became the hero of a tournament as a disguised knight, was captured and later rescued by his loyal follower, Blondel, but failed to win the love of the beautiful Elspeth, who in turn loved and finally married Blondel. A humorous, exciting, historical romance, full of the atmosphere of the times, but written in modern English. Should be enjoyed by men and boys." Bkl.

* Cardigan; illus. by H. C. Pitz. Harper y 433p illus (Harper's junior classics) $2.50

An abridged edition of a novel first published 1901

"A spirited romance of the troublous times preceding the Revolution (1774-5). Unhistorical interests predominant—Cardigan's love, and extraordinary adventures among Indians. Scenes: Mohawk Valley, Pittsburg, and Lexington. Hero is nephew of Sir William Johnson, who like Walter Butler, Molly Brandt, and some others, is a well-known character from history." Baker's Best

R. W. Chambers' 'Maid-at-arms' (Harper 1902 342p illus o.p. 1941) is a sequel which "depicts the time when the War was sweeping towards the Mohawk Valley," and when the first serious split occurred in the Iroquois Confederacy." Nield

Drums of Aulone. Appleton-Century 1927 347p $2.50

"How a spirited French girl, persecuted by an unwelcome lover and imperilled by her father's Huguenot allegiance and defiance of the King, escapes from France to find happiness in the New World. Louis XIV, Madame de Maintenon, the Count de Frontenac and other notable personages appear." Cleveland

Appeared in "Liberty" under title: "Fear of God"

Happy Parrot. Appleton-Century 1929 334p $2.50

"A story of the troublesome days preceding the War of 1812, and of Eric Strake who commanded the topsail schooner The Happy Parrot, engaged in the slave trade. There are pirates and slavers and men-of-war on every hand, and a beautiful young Irish girl for good measure." Book rev. digest

Little red foot. Grosset 350p $1

First published 1921 by Doran

"Dramatic love story of John Drogue and Penelope Grant with its background of Indian warfare in north-eastern New York, 1774-1782, with the Colonists and their allies the Oneidas on one side, and the British, their Hessian mercenaries and the other five Iroquois tribes on the other." Cleveland

Maid-at-arms. See note under Chambers. Cardigan

Painted minx. Appleton-Century 1930 306p $2.50

"New York during the years 1777 to 1781 in possession of the British and besieged by Continental troupes, provides the background for a lively, light romance. The heroine is a gay little Tory actress at the Theatre Royal and there is a Continental soldier lover. The characters are largely drawn from life with the ill-fated André the real hero of the story. Appeared in 'Women's Home Companion.' Bkl.

Rake and the hussy. Appleton-Century 1930 440p o.p. 1941

"The War of 1812 furnishes the background for this story of adventure and romance. The rake—a gallant young fellow named Joshua Brooke—is actively engaged in aiding Andrew Jackson defend New Orleans; and the hussy—a charming and fearless little patriot, Naia—helps her lover." Book rev. digest

Secret service operator 13. Appleton-Century 1934 405p $2.50

Also available from Triangle bks. at 39c

"The adventures of a Federal woman spy in the Civil War. She falls in love with a Confederate secret service operator who is often one of her chief opponents. Her efforts to do her duty to her cause and, at the same time save her lover from being captured, makes very entertaining reading. Historical background is interesting and accurate." Hunting

Whistling cat. Appleton-Century 1932 379p $2.50

"An historical novel of the Civil war relating the adventures of two young Texans, a boy and a girl, who served in the Northern army as telegraph operators." Book rev. digest

y Happy mountain. Viking 1928 313p o.p. 1941

"A passage in the life of Wait-still-on-the-Lord Lowe, a mountain boy, who goes 'far'n beyond' where there are 'big wide valleys and past them the ocean-sea,' and crowded cities and many books; but it needs only the rumor that his sweetheart is being wooed by his old enemy to send him hurrying homeward. The book, rather difficult reading, because of the dialect used in narration as well as dialog, proves to be a beautiful story, simply told, and rich with local color and sympathetic characterization." Cleveland

Some of the same characters occur in the author's "Homeplace" and "Weather tree" Contains a glossary of unusual words

y Homeplace. Viking 1929 275p o.p. 1941

"This second novel is, like its predecessor 'Happy Mountain,' a story of the Tennessee mountains, and many of the characters are those of the first book. How Fayre Jones, the lovable, self-styled 'muddle-headed' village orphan . . . finds himself and wins a homeplace for his girl, Bess Howard . . . is the story of 'Homeplace.' The chief charm of the book lies in the delightful character sketches of the mountain people and their beautiful, poetic language in which the story is written." Wis bul

Some of the same characters appear in the author's "Happy mountain" and "Weather tree"

y Weather tree. Viking 1932 298p o.p. 1941

"An 'outlander' comes to Glen Hazard, the Tennessee village of 'The happy mountain' and 'Homeplace,' claims some land on the hillside and proposes to cut down the great white oak—a guide and weather prophet for the region—to make room for a brick-making plant. For this and other foolish mistakes he is forced to flee, despite the love that has developed between him and his greatest enemy's." Pittsburgh Glossary

 "Germany, mainly between 1503 and 1547. Many localities are touched, including Erfurt, Eisenach, Wittenberg, the Black Forest, and Elsieben. Illustrates the earlier and later periods of Luther's career—portraying him both as reformer in the great world, and as man in his own home. Besides the outstanding figure of Luther, other historic personages (such as Philip Melancthon) appear" Nield

 Tracks in the snow. Dial press 1928 284p o p 1941
 "A murder mystery 'thriller' written by the English biographer of Abraham Lincoln." Bkl
 "The uncommon distinction of the book lies in its incidental scenes of country life, its portraiture, its strong literary style, and the charm with which Lord Charnwood has invested the Rector's own personality." Spectator
- Charques, Dorothy
 Between sleeping and waking Macmillan 1938 303p o p 1941
 "In this story of a mother and her two daughters who live in a quiet English manor the author has successfully portrayed the unreal atmosphere created by the strange behavior of Agnes, one of the daughters, who, since the death of her husband in Africa, has become so peculiar and fey that she seems to wander in some inner dream between sleeping and waking. A powerful and unusual novel in which Agnes's extraordinary detachment is contrasted with the naturalness of her sister and the other characters of the narrative." Baldwin

Sandhog. Penn 1938 329p o.p. 1941

"A good occupational novel, about men who build tunnels. Its authentic details of construction will hold the interest of men and boys, who may care less for its somewhat conventionalized love story." Wis. bul.

Borden Chase's "East river" (Crowell 1935 289p o.p. 1941) is another recommended story of "sandhogs"

Chase, Mary Ellen, 1887-

y Dawn in Lyonesse. Macmillan 1938 115p $1.75 (W)

"With appealing characters and lovely pictures of the Cornish country, Miss Chase tells the story of Ellen a fisherman's daughter, and her romance with her faithful unexpressive suitor, who can offer her only a humble home." Ontario library review

y Mary Christmas. Little 1926. 142p $1.25

"A rare and exquisite little story. It tells of the potent influence of the exotic Mary Christmas, an Armenian pedlar, upon the lives of a happy Maine family. Striving to determine the exact nature of her hold upon their affections, the Wescotts 'only knew that for years she had added to their lives a vividness and a completeness which had not been there before she came.'" Cleveland

* Mary Peters. Macmillan 1934 377p y $2.50

Also available in the Royal edition (Macmillan $1)

"Mary Peters passed the early years of her life on board her father's sailing ship. It was not until she was in her teens and the ship was wrecked off the California coast that she spent much time on land in the Maine village where her ancestors had lived. With the wisdom gained from her broad-minded mother and her life at sea, Mary lived a full, intelligent life, unhampered by narrow conventions, and was able to view with peace the approach of a lonely old age." Book rev. digest

"It is a scrupulously accurate and passionately loyal picture of an old America lingering into the present." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

* Silas Crockett. Macmillan 1935 404p y $2.50

"The stirring story of four generations of a New England family: Silas, captain of a clipper, who took his wife with him on his voyages; his son Nicholas, lost at sea in a storm; his grandson Reuben, who was captain of a passenger coast-steamer, and when that stopped running, of a ferry-boat, and his great-grandson Silas, who had to leave college to work in a herring-factory." Book rev. digest

"Not often can we hope to find the American scene and the American character depicted with such importance and such complete understanding." Boston Transcript

Chateaubriant, Alphonse de, 1877-

Peat-cutters; tr by F. M. Robinson. Dial press 1927 308p o.p. 1941

"This novel, awarded the Grand Prix du Roman de l'Académie Française, shows us the land of the peat bogs, a cruel place where fogs and cold and the very turn of the waters may undo you, but a place infinitely precious to the people of Brière. Against this somber background is played a drama of primary passions. The search of the old ranger of the district for the lost letters patent on which the safety of Brière depends, his quarrel with his family, his struggle against his own warped old soul—these are the materials of the plot. But the real hero of the story is Brière" Pittsburgh

"A story of post-Civil War days in Georgia and of the struggle of the farmers against a Yankee-owned corporation which was attempting to take the land away from them." Book rev. digest

"The writing through the book, particularly the descriptions of nature, is of excellent quality; the plot and the characterization of the people connected with the invading lumber company are not so good, especially the inevitable lovely daughter of the rich man; but the natives, their appearance, their rich flatteringsome talk, their curious mental processes, their standards and scruples (and lack of scruples) have been set down with really admirable skill and color." * Man who was Thursday; a nightmare.
Dodd 1908 281p $2.50

"Here the Rabelaisian fun is fast and furious. The oracles are masquerading as clowns and harlequins: wisdom flashes out in star-showers. The story seems as empty and preposterous as a nightmare; then, suddenly, it has a meaning. A club of seven anarchists are in a plot to destroy the world; six of them, after terrific efforts to run each other to earth and foil the deadly scheme, turn out to be police officers in disguise. But narrative and talk are a form of dialectic. The chief detective sitting in the darkness had given each man his commission. It is all an allegory of human life, the everlasting struggle in which man finds it so hard to distinguish friend from foe, right from wrong; where the whole basis and ultimate sanction of his faith must be an enigma."  "In a series of episodes, treated with remarkable fidelity to facts, Mr. Chotzinoff develops the intimate personality of the pock-marked, recalcitrant youth of Bonn without resorting to any of the sentimental rot which inevitably attaches itself to the life of a hero. Against a background of well-known characters, whose personalities flash out in deft strokes, stalks the uncouth figure of Beethoven in true perspective, his own life furnishing the raison d'être of his works." Sat. rev. of lit.

 Two living and one dead; tr. from the Norwegian by Edwin Bjorkman. Live-right 1932 288p o p 1941
 "The ethical dilemma presented in this powerful and moving narrative is based on a simple plot—three employees of a post office are held up by bandits, one is killed, one wounded and one surrenders. The problem of whether the third man is a coward is discussed in a vivid, straightforward style." Baltimore
 "The inter-Scandinavian prize novel of the year . . . brings to an event such as might have made merely a 'mystery thriller's an unusually moving union of narrative suspense and subject understanding. The essential lucidity of the book lies in the depth and precision of the author's grasp on the lives of these people." Books (NY Herald Tribune)

 A.B.C. murders. Pocket bks. 246p pa 25c
 First published 1936 by Dodd
 "Hercule Poirot receives a series of taunting letters telling him that in a certain town, on a certain day, something will happen. In alphabetical order, the murders occur, apparently by a maniac, and Scotland Yard, despite its warning, is unable to prevent them. Finally, after the fourth, a man is arrested and then M. Poirot does his most astute work, completely vanquishing his challenger." Hunting
- * And then there were none. Grosset 264p 85c
 First published 1940 by Dodd. Published in England under title: Ten little niggers "Deals with a group of people on an island off the coast of England. One by one, they meet a mysterious death. Obviously the murderer is one of the group, since the island is inaccessible. But who is the guilty person, and the motive he is aiming at make a baffling and exceedingly clever tale." Ontario library review
 No detective
- Appointment with death; a Poirot mystery. Dodd 1938 301p $2
 Also available from Grosset at 85c
 Shows Hercule Poirot "traveling in the Holy Land and visiting Petra. Among his traveling companions is a woman who is using her powers of purse and personality to keep her grown children in subjection—an ideal subject for murder, and we can thoroughly enjoy her death, and Poirot's final demonstration that she was not killed by her children, but by someone much more unlikely." Book-of-the-month club news

Death on the Nile Dodd 1937 326p $2
Also available from Grosset at 85c

The author's "main achievement . . . lies in covering up the killer who ran amuck on the S. S. Karnak while some highly polished friends and enemies were returning from the Second Cataract; among them, fortunately, was Hercule Poirot, the little Belgian [detective] who saw death coming well in advance." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

Murder at the vicarage; a detective story.

Triangle bks 319p 39c

First published 1930 by Dodd

"While the vicar is away ministering to a dying parishioner, a rich, elderly, unpopular man is murdered in the vicarage. Hercule Poirot does not appear." Pittsburgh

Murder in the Calais coach. Pocket bks. 305p pa 25c

First published 1934 by Dodd

"A man is murdered on a through train from Stamboul to Calais. He was stabbed twelve times and this number was one of the clues that enabled the famous French detective, M. Hercule Poirot, who happened to be on board, to unravel the mystery. The plot has the advantage of being something different, and the story is swiftly moving and entertaining." Hunting

* Murder of Roger Ackroyd. Grosset 306p y (Madison square bks) 50c

First published 1926 by Dodd

"Roger Ackroyd, a retired business man, is found dead in his study shortly after the suicide of the woman he was to have married. Suspicion and the police point to Ackroyd's adopted son as the murderer, but the outcome of the story is a complete surprise. As in others of Miss Christie's tales, the mystery is solved by the quaint Frenchman, M. Poirot." Bkl.

"When Rufus Fan Aldin bought the string of rubies containing the famous 'Heart of fire,' a flawless stone of great value, he made the mistake of his life. For he gave the necklace to his daughter, who was the only being whom he loved more than himself, and Ruth was murdered and the jewels stolen. The task of finding the murderer and the thief was given to Hercule Poirot and he solved the case with finesse but very little speed." Book rev. digest

Far country Macmillan 1915 509p $2.50

"The title of the book is taken from the story of the prodigal son, but Mr Churchill's hero, when he comes to himself and finds that he has wandered into a far country, far from being an outcast, is accounted one of the world's successful men. The substance which he has spent riotously consists not in worldly goods, for of these he has accumulated a store, but of the more precious coin of honor and ideals. The story follows in detail the career of Hugh Paret from boyhood to maturity. After graduation from Harvard he is admitted to the bar, joining in his home city a firm of corporation lawyers, the first of their kind. This is in the early eighties, so the action of the story is coincident with the rise of big business, and in its later course, with the first faint dawns of the social conscience." Book rev. digest

"Pudd'nhead Wilson" is "a story of a sober kind, picturing life in a little town of Missouri, half a century ago. . . . The principal incidents relate to a slave of mixed blood and her almost pure white son, whom she substitutes for her master's baby. The slave by birth grows up in wealth and luxury, but turns out a peculiarly mean scoundrel, and, perpetrating a crime, meets with due justice. The science of finger-prints is practically illustrated in detecting the fraud." Baker's Best

"Those extraordinary twins" is laid in the same town and according to the author an outgrowth of the previous tale except in this story the twins are a double headed freak

- Tuscan spring; a novel about Sandro Botticelli. Reynal 1939 328p o.p. 1941
 "A romantic, ornate story of the Renaissance painter's life, his search for spiritual beauty, and his struggle to express it in his paintings. Numerous famous Italian painters appear in the book, and Botticelli's paintings are discussed and criticized. The political and religious corruption and the elaborate, colorful background of the times are recreated in detail. Specialized in its appeal to readers interested in the period or its painters." * Red sky in the morning. Macmillan 1935 288p $2.50

"Will Prince, a sensitive adolescent, becomes aware that his father's jealousy of his mother is the reason for their poor shanty existence on a lonely island instead of in the Maine village of his forefathers. The boy's devotion to his father, who scorned him, the separation of his parents, the interest of his mother in another man, create a turmoil in the boy's mind with which he cannot cope. His heroic and needless sacrifice, to save his mother as he believes, closes the book with high tragedy. A somber story, poetically but economically told, full of Maine country and the sea." Bkl.

The story "of a man who lost his memory and wandered through Germany after the War of 1914-1918, was over seeking to pick up the threads of his earlier life. He became an intimate of Hitler and rose high in the inner circles of the Nazi party. When Hitler burned the Reichstag he became Chief of Police for the Nazi party—and remembered who he really was." "The book shows her as a charming girl, learning subjects far beyond the comprehension of ordinary children, and, at eleven, after the death of her mother, assuming the position of lady of the manor, greeting her father's distinguished guests with grace, poise, and gaiety. . . The characters are well portrayed. The plots and counter-plots of Aaron Burr are recorded lightly. . . The swift-moving story creates in the reader a great fondness for Theodosia and a not too great horror of her father's questionable actions." Library journal

"Taxidermy was Ernest Bingley's business, and when he won a prize at the state fair for his exhibit of Iowa fauna, he saw at once a chance to realize his dream of visiting Bingley castle, the English home of the Bingleys that he hoped were his ancestors. Mistaken by the owners for the eccentric millionaire who was to rent the castle, Ernest accepted the role, for he had seen Lady Rosa and knew himself to be her knight. "The captain of a coasting schooner on leave in Boston is taken by a crooked taxi driver to a small hotel of questionable repute. The big man does not suspect the character of the place, but his pity is roused by the proprietor's brutal treatment of his wife. When the captain learns that the woman is in danger of her life, he spirits her away to the Portland boat and entrusts her to friends on board. The hotel-owner follows. On the next night the ship is wrecked, and only those on Captain Tingloff's life raft are saved. The brutal husband never reaches shore." Book rev digest

"The history of a European married to a Malayan wife, who reverts to her ancestral savagery. He lives a miserable life among the fierce Malays and Dyaks of Borneo, and the tragedy culminates when his beloved daughter forsakes him to marry a savage. The awful effect on the mental and moral nature of the solitude and the contact with savagery is brought out with intense imaginative skill." Baker's Best

y Graper girls; illus. by Ruth King. Appleton-Century 1931 280p illus $2

"The Graper girls were Marian, Beth and Ernestine, the daughters of a wealthy millowner in a small town in Wisconsin. The girls take turns in relating the story, so that the viewpoint of each is represented. For older girls." Book rev. digest "Letting the three girls do all the talking gives opportunity for many pungent comments. You will sympathize with these girls and yet laugh, too, at their foibles." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

E. F. Corbett's "Graper girls go to college" (Appleton-Century 1932 318p $2) and "Growing up with the Grapers" (Appleton-Century 1934 318p $2) continues the story of the same girls

Langworthy family; a novel of Mount Royal. Appleton-Century 1937 439p $2.50

"A story of family life in a midwestern American city about the end of the nineteenth century. When Colonel Langworthy married one of the Mills girls, he took into his family her two sisters, her brother, and an orphan niece. Later his own daughter Bess joined the group of those who depended on him for all the material comforts of life. But the Colonel's fortunes waned and as time passed, one by one his dependents slipped out from under his care until finally he was left to pass his last days in tragic loneliness." Book rev. digest

E. F. Corbett's "Light of other days; a novel of Mount Royal" (Appleton-Century 1938 361p $2.50) (W) is the story of three generations of an Irish family and their Americanization

* Mr and Mrs Meigs. Appleton-Century 1940 278p $2.25 (W)

The story is about Mrs Meigs at forty, when she has been married ten years. In a growing mid-west city of the 1880's, the busy family has its lively ups and downs

"Gives the flavor of the years of which she writes." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune) Sequel to "She was Carrie Eaton"

"Mrs. Meigs, now 82 years young, meets a gentleman of her own age who proves a pleasant friend" Cleveland

A nice long evening. Appleton-Century 1933 275p $2

"Young Mrs Meigs' is one year older and just as forceful a character in this book as in the former one. Altho she is past eighty she refuses to be bullied by her daughter Millicent; plays cards with her three cronies; watches her grandson's love affair; takes care of the widowed Molly and her baby son; and when blindness threatens her indomitable self, conquers that too." Book rev. digest

Mrs Meigs' adventures are continued in "Mrs Meigs and Mr Cunningham"

Queen's holiday. Appleton-Century 1940 282p $2 (W)

"Story of young Queen Elsa who was forced to abdicate her throne to the mythical kingdom of Leucadia—and who finds refuge and commences a new life in New York City." Hunting

"Unblushingly escapist and Elizabeth Corbett doesn't pretend otherwise." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

She was Carrie Eaton; a novel about the young Mrs Meigs. Appleton-Century 1938 320p $2 (W)

"The lady who in her eighties became well and favorably known to thousands of readers as young Mrs Meigs is here presented as she was before she became Mrs. Meigs at all, in a story which pleasantly re-creates the life of a small Ohio city in the seventies." Sat. rev. of lit.

E. F. Corbett's "Mr Underhill's progress" (Reynall 1934 o.p. 1941) is the story of a middle-aged bachelor and how he finds romance

Corcoran, William, 1901-

Blow, desert winds! Appleton-Century 1935 311p $2

"The hero, Lee McLean, is introduced breaking prison. Fleeing, he rides into range country dominated by two groups of bad men, rustlers and hired retaliators for a large corporation. Local ranchers are both terrorized and duped by the rustlers. Lee frees the country of both groups through a series of thrilling episodes. At last, Lee is pardoned and started upon the life he loves, with the girl whom he had rescued, protected and loved... Serialized in 'Cosmopolitan.'" Hunting

Golden horizons. Macrae Smith co. 1937 282p o.p. 1941

"This story of Kansas in its frontier days has all the elements of the usual western, bad men, gun play and all. But it has also a minor theme that gives it a higher rating, that is the agricultural development of the state, as the secret of winter wheat brings fortune to the burning prairies." Wis. bul.

The road returns. Bobbs 1940 457p $2.50

"This sequel to 'Three miles square' relates the widow Mantz's continuing struggle for her farm and her children's education. The years from 1917 to 1923 brought new problems—the war interrupted plans, and then came prosperity and a sudden slump. Realistic, frank, and somewhat slow, but lacking the harshness of the sterner farm novels." Bkl.

Three miles square. Bobbs 1939 448p $2.50

"In his portrayal of a single farm family, during the years 1910 to 1916, the author has used for background the whole Iowan farming community in which they live. The book opens with the death of Chris Mantz; it continues with the description of the widow's struggle to keep her farm, and educate her four children." Book rev. digest

Excursion to Lilliput; a novel by Lewis Gibbs (pseud.). Appleton-Century 1934 244p o.p. 1941

"Just one day in the life of Rob, likeable 12-year-old English schoolboy. The day would have been quite different had Rob not carried to school to impress his friends a pencil forgotten that morning by his father. Classes are attended and weathered. Rob is frightened by a bigger boy and conquers his fear. He goes fishing, trespasses, is caught and gets away, and he does lose that pencil. The story, so genuine in its remembrance of a child's emotions, is likely to strike responsive chords in the reader's memory." N.Y. libraries

Poisoned chocolates case, by Anthony Berkeley [pseud.]. Doubleday 1929 299p o.p. 1941

"Mrs Graham Bendix, the victim, received via her husband and Sir Eustace Pennefather a box of liqueur chocolates containing fatal doses of nitrobenzene. Scotland Yard failed to discover the murderer. So the Crime Club, founded by Roger Sheringham, and having for its members Sir Charles Wildman, criminal lawyer, Mrs Fielder Flemming, dramatist, Morton Bradley, detective story writer, Alicia Dammers, novelist, and Ambrose Chitterwick, business man, undertakes to solve the case by individual sleuthing. At six successive meetings of the club each member makes a report of his findings, theory and solution; but flaws are found in each case until the real murderer is brought to light by Mr Chitterwick." Trial and error, by Anthony Berkeley [pseud.]. Doubleday 1937 351p o.p. 1941

This is the story of little Mr Lawrence Todhunter who, because a weak heart has doomed him to almost immediate death, decided that before his death he would make one final useful gesture and eliminate from the scene the most obnoxious person he could find. Here, he felt, was the truly perfect crime, and he was greatly shocked when Vincent Palmer, a young man of whom he was fond, was arrested for Jean's murder. He hurried to Scotland Yard and confessed his guilt, and great was his indignation when they refused to take him seriously and looked upon him as a crank. Mr. Todhunter now found himself in the amazing situation of having to do detective work in order to prove himself guilty of murder and save an innocent man

Who dwell with wonder. Dutton 1940 279p $2.50

"An undercurrent of emotion runs through this book like a deep quiet stream. It is full of the wise philosophy of age. The central figure is an older woman, Mrs Luttrell. She has had a full life, many problems, joys and sorrows. At the moment she is preoccupied with the problems of her daughters. One is about to get a divorce; another is trying to make up her mind to get married, a third, the brilliant one, is doomed to exile. Their mother broods over them anxiously until she sees a measure of peace return to each. The inference is that she will die content." Book-of-the-month club news

"Following the doctor on his rounds the reader is let into the life of the Connecticut community which he serves, and the secrets of the townspeople. Dr Bull is a coarse, earthy, Rabelaisian type of man, of strong appetites and immense vitality who keeps his patients in a fairly good state of health by liberal doses of castor oil and horse-doctor methods. Neglect of his duties as health inspector brings on a typhoid epidemic, resentment against the doctor flames up and the town holds an indignation meeting to oust him. y S. S. San Pedro. Harcourt 1931 136p o.p. 1941

"With unfaltering directness the story of the last voyage of the 'San Pedro' is told, and from the beginning the end is inevitable. With great economy the author tells of the ship's final hours at the Hoboken pier, of her departure for Argentine, and of her inability to meet the relentless force of the storm that sent her to the depths. The characters that carry forward the action are portrayed with amazing clarity. The story is based on the sinking of the 'S S Vestris'." Bkl.

"An interesting and worthwhile book for older boys and girls . . . The boy, Cieza, is real, and the conditions in South America under the Spanish conquerors, seen through his eyes, are brought home to the reader in a particularly convincing way. The book will interest young people as an exciting and adventurous story and, in addition, will make the conquerors and colonists of New Granada and the whole matter of Spanish exploration in the sixteenth century more real and vivid." * Saracinesca. Macmillan 1887 432p $2

The first of four novels which "afford a panorama of Roman society from 1885 to the present time in the form of annals of a princely house. The first two comprise a romance of passion and jealousy, in which the loves of the chaste and beautiful Corona and Sant' Ilario are the principal motive; family feuds and reconciliations, duels, battles, suicide, furnish the more violent incidents, while Roman life is depicted in many genre pictures and portraiture of numerous characters—public and private. . . The corruption of public life is disclosed, and the obscure forces that agitate the financial world are the subject of special study in 'Don Orsino,' for the young hero occupies himself with the building speculations that were such a striking phenomenon in . . . Roman business. 'Corleone' is a Sicilian episode in the story of the Saracinesca, where they are brought into contact with the Corleone, 'the worst blood in Italy,' and with the Mafia. Some of the scenes are thrilling; an ardent love-story runs through them." Baker's Historical

First published 1922 by Cosmopolitan bk.
"In the wilderness beyond the north shore of Lake Superior, 'Jolly' Roger McKay lived the life of an outlaw, having sinned against the letter of the law to obey the instincts of humanity. He plays a game of hide and seek with the Royal mounted police, by turns outwitting them and being outwitted. The constant companion of his hopes, fears and hardships is his faithful dog Peter, who also shares with him his love for Nada, the girl of Cragg's Ridge whose love and loyalty no outlawry could dampen. When, after a long and perilous separation, Roger and Nada are reunited and married, it is Peter who, unwittingly, helps the police to hunt them down for the last time. But it is only for the purpose of handing Roger his pardon." Book rev. digest

Flower of the north. Harper 1912 307p front o.p. 1941

"An old house, built two hundred years before by a chevalier of France who came into the wilderness, is the setting for the more fascinating scenes of this story. To the world outside it is known as D'Arcambal house, but Philip Whittemore, who is admitted to the inner sanctuary of the home by its master, Henry D'Arcambal, learns to know it by its old name, Fort o' God. In the background there is a fight—a fierce struggle between Philip and the forces of wealth and greed that are united to crush him, but at heart the story is a romance. And the romance centers about fair Jeanne, who has grown to womanhood at Fort o' God where the wild flavor of the wilderness is so strangely blended with the courtly atmosphere of old France." - Broadsides, a novel. Macmillan 1940 528p $2.50

Published in England under title. Heart of oak

"A naval novel of the Napoleonic wars . . . told by Captain O'Carboy who though . . . a hereditary foe of the English, was led by the desire to avenge his father's murder to enlist as a midshipman in the British navy, and rose to command a vessel at Trafalgar. The author knows his navy, and gives a vivid picture of Nelson's ships, their rig and armament, and of the life aboard them as well as their tactics and maneuvers." Book-of-the-month club news

Dargan, Mrs Olive (Tilford)

Call home the heart, by Fielding Burke (pseud.). Longmans 1932 432p o.p. 1941

"A serious study of the problems of love, family, and daily living among the mountain whites in North Carolina, and of the present conflict between the mill-workers and their employees, underlies this story of a young woman who rebels against her hard life and runs away, to become a mill-worker and an organizer in the valley below." A stone came rolling, by Fielding Burke pseud., Longmans 1935 412p o p 1941

"A novel about a North Carolina mill town, the uncertainty that eats at the hearts of the more intelligent millowners, and the growing feeling of solidarity among the workers. Many of the characters are carried over from the previous novel ('Call home the heart'). . . Though the point of view is strongly Left Wing, dogma is subordinated, with rare exceptions, to the portrayal of human beings." New Yorker

Return to Coolami. Macmillan 1936 325p
o p 1941

"The story of Susan who with her parents and her husband, is returning to the latter's home, Coolami, near Sydney. During the 800-mile drive, through beautiful scenes that are made vivid to the reader, the absorbing drama of the several lives is unfolded most skillfully. For all four the journey's end, means peace and happiness." Ontario library review

Waterway Macmillan 1938 445p $2.50
(W)

"The action of this fast moving story is compressed into the short period of a single day. During that time each of its characters faces a crisis. The climax is reached when a ferry on which most of the principal characters are returning from a day's outing is rammed by a liner and sunk. The setting is a small suburb across the harbor from Sydney, Australia, and the author again demonstrates her ability to present skillfully delineated characters in circumstances which reveal much of their background and to deal with tensely emotional and significant situations." following. A story of Parisian Society in the days of the Second Empire. Depicts, after the way of satire, the profligfor instance, that the 'Duc de Mora' is the noted Duc de Morny and that 'Felicia

"A novel that will appeal to the musical minded in every community. It tells the story of a Bohemian peasant girl who becomes a great singer, reaches the height of her career, and retires. The author, who is the daughter of Alma Gluck, knows music and musicians, and her introductions of real people into the story—Caruso, Scotti, Sembrich, and others whose names have been household words—adds to the reality." Story about a seaman who figured God had elected him to solve the secret of the universe

"Mr. Davis is adept in capturing lingo and shaping his characters quite unforgettably through a few bits of casual conver-

 "The story of a young girl who, though genuinely in love with a fine man, cannot face the prospect of the hard life marriage with him will offer her, so runs away, marries for wealth and ease and comes to see her folly." Wis. bul.
 Old Pybus. Knopf 1928 376p $2.50
 "Old Pybus is a gentle philosopher, formerly a dealer in rare books, now the 'boots' at an English country inn. He is estranged from his sons, Conrad, rich and thorough-going mucker, and Probyn, rich but redeemable, and his grandson, Lance, the twentieth century version of the old man, does not know him. But he discovers him and they become fast friends. Old Pybus furthers Lance's literary ambitions, helps him out of the wrong kind of love with the wrong girl and into the right kind with the right girl, and brings about a better understanding between Lance and his father." Outlook Roper's Row. Knopf 1929 365p $2
 "Christopher's mother has sacrificed greatly to put him through medical college. And for her sake Chris has suffered, without retaliation, the sneers of his fellow students at his lameness and his diffidence. Ruth Avery who rooms in the same house in shabby Roper's Row loves the earnest, pale young student, and like his mother wants nothing better than to serve him. After they are married his success is largely due to her faith and courage." Book rev. digest
 * Sorrell and son. Knopf 1925 400p $2.50
 "An absorbing tale of a father's sacrifices to give his boy a gentleman's opportunities, and of the son's career. The father, Stephen Sorrell, an impoverished World war veteran, humbles his pride and accepts a job as porter in a cheap hotel. The novel is chiefly concerned with Sorrell's slow rise, spurred to heart-breaking toil by his high ambitions for Kit, and with his successful blinding of fatherly concern and friendly understanding in all dealings with his charming, clear-visioned son." A Houghton Mifflin Fellowship novel.
A Dutch town on the North Sea is the background of this novel. The story opens in 1901 when Tjerk Mellena is eight years old and carries him through school days, army service and marriage. Some sketches based on scenes from "Old haven" have appeared in the "Atlantic monthly"

"Not an exciting novel, but a thoroughly human one, which gives an insight into the reactions of the Hollanders, their strict customs, their superstitions and dislike of strangers. The picturesque characters are very much alive; the reader's interest is aroused in all of them. A few frank episodes may offend." Bkl.

Watts. Harper 1931 388p illus o.p.
1941

"Written with a light and witty pen, and in the form of a diary, this story tells the everyday doings of a very English lady in a small country house. Her domestic problems, a tiresome round of teas and bazaars varied with an occasional trip to London, a silent husband, two lively children and their French governess, a domineering cook, and some racy village characters make up the picture." Book children. The author has made of Claudia, as seen through the eyes of her daughters

The trip was arranged by her publishers, and it entailed much rushing about from inimitable sly humor, clever phrasing, and gentle satire, makes an amusing book, of responsibility and power on women's tempers and manners afford rich oppor-

 Jalna. Little 1927 347p $2.50

"Jalna is the family home of the Whiteoaks. Gathered under its roof are representatives of each generation from the time the grandparents drifted to Canada via England from India and there built their homestead on a lavish scale. Rennie, 37, is the present head of the household which includes Gran—a formidable old lady of 99—two uncles, an aunt, an elder sister, and four half-brothers. An affectionate, warring group of strong personalities from the old lady down to Wakefield, the youngest, aged nine. Two of the boys marry and bring their wives home. The coming of the second bride, an American, affects each one of the clan for happiness or pain; and conversely, for Alayne the months at Jalna are crowded with sharp experience of bitterness or delight and when she goes, the problem of her love for Rennie and his for her is only partially solved."  Young Renny (Jalna-1906). Little 1935 324p $2.50

"The continuity of the Jalna chronicle is broken in this story to hark back to the time when Renny is yet a boy and old Adeline, formidable, full of vitality, a mere eighty. The customary Whiteoak quarrels flare with more than usual violence because of the presence of Malahide Court who ingratiates himself with his cousin Adeline, and antagonizes everyone else. Renny's efforts to make life unpleasant for their guest afford some amusing incidents, and no story of Jalna is ever lacking in drama." N.Y. libraries Followed by "Whiteoak heritage"

Restless is the river. Scribner 1939 514p $2.50 (W)

Story of pioneer life in the Sac Prairie region of Wisconsin from 1839 to 1850. Count Brogmar, exiled from Hungary, comes to Wisconsin, hoping to grow grapes for wine making. His own exuberant nature carries him thru a long series of good fortune and misfortune, but his wife never forgets that she was a princess and accustomed to gentle ways of living. Maps on lining-papers

Still is the summer night. Scribner 1937 356p $2.50

"The author writes of his native village Sac Prairie (Prairie du Sac and Sauk City) on the Wisconsin river. The time is the 1880's when lumber rafts were coming down the river. A farm home on the edge of the village is the scene. The characters are two brothers, the wife of one of them, and the old father who lives in his memories of the Civil War. There are vivid word pictures of the prairie, charming descriptions of community mer-

"Wisconsin in the 1830's, with the fur trade entering its decline, the Indians making their last stand against the white invaders, and the period of settlement about to begin. Chalfonte Pierneau belongs to the old era. A friend of Black Hawk's, he tries to dissuade the chieftain from his disastrous expedition and watches his defeat with sorrow. He listens with skepticism to his friend Hercules Dousman's prediction that the day will come when wheat will take the place of furs as the land's chief product, but comes to accept the change when it arrives. Life in the Pierneau household is interestingly described. The scenes in trading post and on the river are well done, and love for the beautiful country of which the author writes is evident in every page." Wis. bul

"Adventure-romance of the Mexican border. Don Ex Turner was an autocratic American ranch owner, who stood for no interference with his field hands, some of whom he was suspected of smuggling over the border. Tranquilino McCoy, an Irish-Mexican outlaw, was in the smuggling business. Joe Carrick, of the Border patrol was attempting to catch Tranquilino, wrest some of his grandfather's lands from Don Ex, and woo the Don's fearless young niece. Altogether he had his hands very full." Book rev. digest

Simon & Schuster 1933 249p o.p. 1941

"Guided by her innate good taste, Babette Deutsch has picked and chosen her way carefully through the Dialogues of Plato. Although she resorts to free renderings, she does not lose the dignity and beauty of the original passages. Here and there she changes the setting of a speech, often she adds details and fills in incidents from her imaginations, but all is welded together by her knowledge of and her feeling for the Athens of 2500 years ago." Book rev. digest

"The moral purpose is to anatomize pride and illustrate its strength and weakness. Slenderly attached to the main story developing this idea is the pathetic episode of little Paul Dombey's invalid life and death. Then the history of Mr. Dombey moves on to his business failure and the chastening of his pride." Baker's Best

First published 1854

"A tract-novel inspired by Carlyle's Philosophical Radicalism—a protest against tyrannous utilitarianism and political economy divorced from human feeling. The stage is a hideous manufacturing town created by the two apostles of fact, Gradgrind and Bounderby, and the drama is chiefly enacted by Gradgrind's children brought up on facts, and ruined spiritually by the complete neglect of sympathy and sentiment." Baker's Best

Macmillan $1.75 Introduction by Charles Dickens, the younger

First published 1870

"An unfinished melodrama centering in a mysterious murder and enacted amid the picturesque closes and cathedral buildings of old Rochester (Cloisterham), with scenes in an opium den in Shadwell. The scenic elements create a deep impression of gloom and tragedy, and the plot is an excellent piece of construction. Contains some characteristic types of villainy and passion and some grotesquely humorous figures, who at least reflect the creations of his best period, e.g., Canon Crisparkle, John Jasper, Mr Sapsea."  Nicholas Nickleby

Some recommended editions are:
Heritage $4.25 Illustrated by Steven Spurrier
Dodd (International classics) $2 Illustrated in color by C. E. Brock
Macmillan $1.60 Introduction by Charles Dickens, the younger

First published 1839

"Has a melodramatic plot, of which the mainspring is the antagonism of the good Nicholas and his bad uncle, the usurious Ralph Nickleby. And again the strength of the book is in the numerous comic characters, incidents, and situations—the Mantalins, the Squeers family and their detestable school, Dotheboys Hall, the Cheerybles, Mr. Vincent Crummles, and Mrs. Nickleby and such bizarre objects as Sir Mulberry Hawk Lord Verisopht, and Madeline Bray. The tale somewhat resembles Smollett's picaresque narratives." Baker's Best

The moon was low. Harper 1940 340p $2.50

"A pleasant story, which many readers of popular romance will like. Written with a nicely restrained humor and a real love of the English countryside, it relates the girlhood and young womanhood of a normal, healthy English girl of today. Beginning with a few agonizing days when she thinks her husband is killed on a British destroyer, the story flashes back to her days in school, a childhood attachment, life in Paris, a romance that doesn't work out right, followed by a happy marriage and a happy ending. Dark stranger. Penn 1940 439p $2.50

Also obtainable from Grosset for $1

"It was the failure of the final effort to restore a Stuart to the throne that brought many of our substantial Scotch settlers to America. This is the story of one such family. Lachlan MacLean had joined the ill-fated expedition of 1745 against his better judgment, driven to it by the ardent patriotism of his father and the ambition of his faithless wife. The story tells how he came to America with his two young sons to found a new home. In particular it is the story of Dugald, the younger, the dark stranger of the title. A good novel not too overweighed with historical detail." Wis. bul.

"A solid historical novel, in which romantic adventure is told in simple, homely fashion pleasing to some readers and boring to others. With abundant detail the author follows the course of a New Englander who, leaving his family on an Illinois farm, went on to join the gold rush, and experienced most of the vicissitudes of frontier life—homesteading, house-boating on the Mississippi, ox-teaming in Arkansas, fur-trading, caravaning on the Santa Fe trail, and fighting Indians." "A story which was to have been Dostoevskii's masterpiece but only the first part of which was completed at his death. The brothers Karamazov are the three sons of an old drunkard and sensualist: Ivan, the materialist, Alyosha, the very human and lovable young mystic, and disolute, impecunious Mitya, tried and convicted for murdering his father. A remarkable work, showing at the worst the author's faults of style and construction, and at their best his profound understanding of human nature and power to depict Russian character." Cleveland

"In this autobiography of a Russian landowner condemned to penal servitude in Siberia, Dostoevsky hardly troubles to disguise his own experiences. He traces the different effects of imprisonment on the moral nature, in the life-stories of a group of criminals. It is a terrible record of the anguish of the prisoner's lot" Baker's Best

The idiot; a novel in four parts; tr. from the Russian by Constance Garnett; illus. by Boardman Robinson. Random house 586p illus $3.50

Written 1868; translated 1887

"Dostoevsky puts into a world of foolishness, vice, pretence, and sordid ambitions, a being who in childhood had suffered from mental disease, and who with an intellect of more than ordinary power retains the simplicity and clear insight of a child. In the 'Idiot,' he tried to realize his idea of a truly perfect and noble man; this Prince Myshkin of his, an epileptic like himself, is the champion of humanity. The deeply absorbing drama in which he is a protagonist turns on the salvation of a woman, Nasyasya Filipovna who had been corrupted in young girlhood." Baker's Best

"The scene is... Richmond, Virginia, on the 80's and 90's. The story is of a self-made man, a typical product of the post-war south, whose struggle for power drives him onward to crush ruthlessness with the same tactics, forcing him to ruin friends and relatives on the way. It is realistic and honest but not pleasant writing; involved unscrupulous financial dealings will interest some readers, bore others." Bkl.

Three guardsmen

"Thus, 'Twenty years after' and 'Vicomte de Bragelonne' make a cycle of romances, retelling the exploits of four heroes from youth to age, and presenting a magnificent panorama of contemporary history (1626-71). The feud between Richelieu and Anne of Austria bulks large, and the adventures of the three guardsmen with their redoubtable and versatile Gascon comrade, d'Artagnan, are intimately connected with affairs of state (1626-28). Political intrigue, court life, duelling and fighting provide a ceaseless flow of absorbing incident." Baker's Best

An actor named Molière; tr. from the French by Lewis Galantière. Scribner 1937 304p o.p. 1941

"Written by an actress, this lusty fictionalized biography of Molière concentrates on his entertaining career as an actor and minimizes the importance of the social background which contributed so much to his plays. Molière is also presented as a lively though sentimental lover, his affairs with Madeleine Béjart, Catherine de Brie, and others, ending in his unhappy marriage to Armande, Madeleine's illegitimate daughter. Decidedly French in its amoral treatment of Molière's amorous adventures, successful mainly as light, diverting reading." Bkl.

Big barn. Grosset 333p $1

First published 1930 by Little

"The Black River valley of New York in the '60s is the scene of this novel of farm life. The chief character is old Ralph Walker, who owns or holds mortgages on most of the countryside and rules it, as he rules his family, with a rod of iron. The element of discord is introduced by the hostility of the two sons over their love for Rose, wife of the older. Through it all, the will power of the old man holds them to his ideals of loyalty to the soil. His big barn, the largest in the East, is a symbol of his patriarchal power." Cleveland

 Miss Munday, a novel. Dial press 1940
 345p $2.50

"The story of Helen Munday, teacher in the High school of River Port, Wisconsin. She has been taught that the children under her care must not only be educated, but given principles of conduct as well. She conforms to the straight-laced mode of life of the villagers... so her days are spent in teaching and her evenings are spent in brooding on the narrowness of her outlook. She falls in love with the fisherman, Adam La Fonde, and she wants terribly to marry him. But she is first, last, and always the school teacher, and the struggle for a new world is lost by her own training." Sat. rev. of lit.

"Ralph Johanssen, son of a German father and a Norwegian mother, has spent ten years in Germany. He returns to the small town of Lessing, ostensibly for his health, really as a Nazi spy and Fifth Columnist. He turns against his stepfather, his mother, his sweetheart; he betrays his half-brothers; he weakens into humanity for only an instant, and dies, shot by his own mother, with 'Hell Hitler!' on his lips." - History of a conscript of 1813; Waterloo, [by] Erckmann-Chatrian. Dutton 359p (Everyman's lib.) 90c

"The conscript" first published 1865 gives the annals of the French campaigns of 1812-13—quantitatively and charmingly put in the simple language of a peasant—designed to expose the wickedness of war. The Conscript is an unfortunate peasant, half a cripple, whose love affairs and prospects in life are ruined by the call to arms." Baker's Best

"Waterloo" first published 1865 is a story of peasant life which reads like a narrative of individual experience. Contains vivid descriptions of the road to Waterloo and of the battle itself

Madame Thérèse; or, The volunteers of '92; tr. from the French. Scribner 264p o.p. 1941

First published 1864

"Madame Thérèse is a vivandière whom a country doctor rescues from among the wounded in a skirmish, and nursing her falls in love (1792-3). Scene, a quiet hamlet near Strasbourg; the Republic before the advent of Bonaparte, in its fresh fervor of liberty, is regarded through the simple understandings of the peasants, their talks and domestic anxieties, while the great military movements sweep irresistibly over their village." - Brief hour of François Villon. Bobbs 1937 365p $2.50

Also available from Blue ribbon bks. at $1

"A picaresque novel, based partly on historical facts, partly on the author's imagination, about the poet François Villon who is shown as adventurer, friend, lover, petty rascal, and benefactor. Following a round of escapades and amorous adventures, Villon reforms at the end and retires to rear an illegitimate daughter Light, frank treatment." Bkl.

Galahad; enough of his life to explain his reputation. Bobbs 1926 340p o.p. 1941

"Those legendary immortals, King Arthur, Lancelot, Galahad, Guinevere and the two Elaines are brought to earth in very human quality and made to speak like modern sophisticated beings. The story opens when Arthur, Guinevere and Lancelot are young, four years after Arthur's wedding. Twice in his life a woman asked Lancelot for his love. Both women were named Elaine. These two incidents begin and end the story, which spans the twenty years between." Book rev. digest

"The story of David Farrill and the man who influenced his life—Patrick Henry. During the part of his life portrayed in this novel, young Patrick Henry was the friend of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson." Hunting Map on lining papers

Private life of Helen of Troy. Bobbs 1925 304p o.p. 1941

"What happened after Troy when Helen, 'unrepentant and too beautiful to kill,' re-established herself in the home of Menelaos. Mr Erskine works always with the nicest regard for tradition and the psychology of the times. It is the contrast between this primitive motive and action and the modern way in which the characters analyze themselves and each other in conversation, which produces the deliciously satiric effect. Helen is portrayed as a disappointed woman always seeking a poignant reality and always foiled by her very beauty, a woman whom experience has made wise, tolerant, courageous and philosophical." Cleveland

Tristan and Isolde; restoring Palamede. Bobbs 1932 347p o.p. 1941

"The main characters of the Tristan legend are encountered in this modern retelling of the tale: Tristan, King Mark, Isolde of Ireland, Isolde of Brittany, and Brangain, as well as a Saracen knight named Palamede. Palamede has come to Cornwall to learn of chivalry and Christian love, but after a time at the stormy court of King Mark, the disillusioned Saracen sets out for the Holy Land." Book rev. digest

Laughing rider. Appleton-Century 1924 307p $2

"Smiling Billy Argent was twenty-nine, part Irish, and found life very enjoyable. He was owner of a horse ranch in Texas from which he one day sold his favorite horse to 'a foreigner from Canada.' Not satisfied that the horse would get good treatment on the way, Billy suddenly decided to catch up with the train and take care of the horse himself. He told none of his friends his plans, so when Jim Harkness was found murdered, and people knew Billy had started in his company, the conclusion was that Smiling Billy was the guilty one. By the time Billy reaches Canada the Mounted police were on his trail. But they reckoned without Annette Savard who had promptly fallen in love with Billy. With her help Billy held off the police until his innocence was proved." Book rev. digest

Renfrew of the Royal mounted. Appleton-Century 1922 256p illus $1.75

Also obtainable from Grosset at 50c

"Renfrew when a young man had gone to Canada in search of adventure, and joined the Royal Mounted police. He had the soul of a true woodsman and enjoyed his work to the utmost. Then one day a young Indian lad, snowblind and almost exhausted, stumbled into Renfrew's camp, and begged aid for his dying mother. The lad's absolute devotion brought memories of Renfrew's own mother, and after a stiff struggle, Renfrew left Canada and built a home for his mother in the United States. With Renfrew as guide and friend a boys' club was formed in the town and these stories were told at their meetings." Book rev. digest

Ertz, Susan

After noon. Appleton-Century 1926 288p $2

"A wholly charming story concerned with Charles Lester, deserted by a flighty wife, and his twin daughters, Venetia and Caroline. Charles has a deep and understanding affection for his daughters, whom he has brought up with due respect for their different individualities, and he suffers keenly when they marry. However, there remains the frank and delightful Lydia Chalmers, an American widow with poise and mellow charm of the afternoon of life." Cleveland

Galaxy. Appleton-Century 1929 395p $2.50

"A passionate desire to face life honestly and fearlessly leads a spirited English girl to defy her dominating father, and, after years of humiliation, her husband. Covers the same period as the 'Forsyte saga' and, like it, assesses the social changes that have followed the close of the Victorian era, but from the woman's point of view." Pittsburgh

Madame Claire Appleton-Century 1923 342p $2

"Madame Claire . . . is an old lady of nearly eighty. She personifies serene and wise old age that has triumphed over all life's serious disappointments, retaining a humorous, openminded outlook over past and present experiences. She had been kept from marrying the man she loved, had been disappointed in her daughters and she sees her entirely satisfactory and beloved son, Eric, unhappy in his married life. But her grandchildren, Judy and Noel, are the delight of her heart. She is their confidante, the sharer of their joys and sorrows, their helper and adviser." Book rev. digest

Nina. Appleton-Century 1924 326p $2

"Nina is the study of a girl whose love, once given, cannot be revoked by any act or will of her own. Brought up by her aunt, Nina falls in love with Morton Caldwell, adopted as a boy by that same aunt. . . Miss Ertz deals directly only with Nina and Morton after their marriage; what has gone before is cleverly reflected in the scenes put before the reader." Grant Overton

* The proselyte. Appleton-Century 1933 359p $2.50

"A story of the followers of Brigham Young and the hardship and tragedy of the pioneer west in America. Chiefly, it is the story of Joseph Hewett, mormon missionary to England and of Zillah, the English girl he converts and marries and takes with him across the plains. Well and movingly told." the unhappy relationship between his parents, his loyalty to both and his knowledge of his father's growing love for another woman. Thru all runs the clear bright thread of Julian's own love for the daughter of a neighboring house, whose sympathy and understanding are always at his call, breaking down his shy reserve and encouraging him to share his thoughts and experiences with her." "In numerous other books Hal G. Evarts has demonstrated his knowledge of the old West and his skill in characterization. He has extensive knowledge of wild animal life also and he writes about it entertainingly. But in his detailed analysis of the thinking and reasoning processes of his dog wolf he sometimes comes perilously close to what the late Theodore Roosevelt branded as 'nature-faking.'" N.Y. Times

 "Long novel chronicling the fortunes of an aristocratic Austrian family, from the carefree pre-War days to the sad days of breakdown and defeat which followed the close of the War. Most of the action takes place on the baronial estate, Maria-Licht, in Carinthia." Book rev. digest
 "The story is somewhat humorless and long, in the early chapters unnecessarily detailed, but it acquires significance as a study of that tradition and of the part its death played in the death of a civilization." Boston Transcript
 * Son of Marietta; tr. from the Dutch by Irene Clephane and David Hallett. Little 1936 813p $3
 "The first half of this long, romantic novel is Marietta's life, from the time she is deserted by her actress mother in Todt, an Italian cathedral town, until she returns, after running away from her workman husband, with Benedetto, a baby whom the bishop has fathered. The rest of the story is Benedetto's, and is typically picaresque as he was a rascal whose loves, brawls, and thievery ended on the gallows" Bkl.

 "A New England girl, in pre-Civil War days, having had a taste of freedom from her father's iron hand while studying at the Abbot's Female Academy, is driven upon her return home to eloping with a stranger. The long leisurely story includes the war years and recounts the couple's social and domestic life in Galena, Ill., while the husband's business enterprises, lead mining and steamboating, round out the detailed picture of life in a bustling western town of the period." N Y. libraries
 Lion's den. Bobbs 1930 374p o.p. 1941
 "Daniel Carson, a young congressman from Wisconsin, discovers in Washington all the dangers of a lion's den. Through the interest of a pretty senator's wife, both social and political advancement are made easy,—easier than the unsuspecting Daniel realizes. A good picture of . . . at the capital, written with knowledge and understanding." Wis. bul.
 Rich man, poor man. Houghton 1936 626p
 $2.50
 "This story of a wealthy Chicago banker's family centers around Hendricks Cortlandt Smith, grandson of the Smiths of the author's 'The Smiths'. Opening with the Roosevelt campaign, and Hendricks, just home from Harvard, joining the progressive forces and marrying an ardent suffragette, the story of Hendricks and his family is the story of the American scene, 1912-29. A portion of the book was serialized in Pictorial Review under the title
 'There is a tide.' Wis. bul.
 The Smiths. Houghton 1925 433p $2.50
 "Two romances run parallel with each other in this drama of modern life—that of Peter and Ann, and that of the city of Chicago. Peter and his pretty wife begin their married life in a humble little home on the edge of the city. Peter is the type of American husband whose business is his first concern. A founder, his ambition is to become an iron master, and with the gradual rise of the Smiths from obscurity to prominence is also depicted the steady growth of Chicago." Book rev. digest

Down the proud stream. Longmans 1937 278p o.p. 1941

"A half fantastic, half realistic story of a village in the West Country of England during one summer early in the present century. The principal character is a youth of eighteen and the tale is chiefly of what he learns—from the market gardener from the beekeeper, and from the beekeeper's daughter—during his visit in the village." The wooden pillow. Viking 1936 311p o.p. 1941

"Grier, a young Englishman, goes to Japan just before the turn of the century. Through a succession of romantic glimpses at the Japanese scene and the Japanese people, runs the delicate love story of Grier and O Kaya San, the girl whose wooden pillow becomes to the young traveler a symbol by which to remember the beauty and tragedy of her life." Guyfford of Wear. Little 1928 358p $2.50

"A typical Farnol romance of eighteenth century England. The Lady Helen D'Arcy is caught house-breaking at night by Sir Richard Guyfford from whom she has come to steal certain reckless letters written by a friend of hers. The romance thus unceremoniously begun is checked by Sir Richard's reputation, which is none of the best. It seems, however, that the misdeeds of a scapegrace cousin are unfairly attributed to Sir Richard, and when this is finally made plain, the many cross-purposes of the plot become one." He meets a quaint little boy setting out to hunt the fortune that shall relieve his beloved young aunt from her load of financial care. How the hero becomes party to the mystery of certain gold that appears with the full of the moon—the money moon—and how that same moon charms the wayward young heroine to submission is all prettily told for the reader who enjoys a real love story." Studs Lonigan; a trilogy. . . Vanguard 3v in 1 $3

Also obtainable from Modern hb. at $1.25

An omnibus volume containing the complete life history of Studs Lonigan. The volumes included are: "Young Lonigan" first published 1932; "Young manhood of Studs Lonigan" first published 1934; "Judgment day" first published 1935. The individual volumes are also obtainable separately from Vanguard for $2.50 each

A sordid and distressing story. "Mr. Farrell is an excellent story teller. He is a first rate artist in current speech. His descriptions of the cheap squalid streets of Chicago, the poolroom bums, the smells and sounds of the animal life of vicious children trying to be sports are vivid and convincing." Sat. rev. of lit.

A world I never made. Vanguard 1936 516p $2.50

"A novel of life among the poor-class Irish in Chicago. Some of the characters in the Studs Lonigan trilogy reappear here. The book begins in August 1911 when shy, timid, little Danny O'Neill has been taken into his grandmother's home because his own parents are too poor to bring him up properly. Pampered by his pipe-smoking old grandmother, Danny suffers from loneliness, becomes a passionate student of big-league batting records, slowly learns a few of the facts of life from the brutal disclosures of his big brother Bill, gets beaten up, is becoming a moody, evasive, introspective child, ill at ease both in his own home and at his grandmother's, when the book ends." Book rev. digest

J. T. Farrell's "No star is lost" (Vanguard 1938 637p $3) (W) is a sequel to "A world I never made" and is followed by "Father and son." Effective realism, but inferior to the other two titles

 Conceived in liberty; a novel of Valley Forge. Simon & Schuster 1939 389p $2.50
 "An American historical novel both short and shrewd. Mr. Fast reconstructs the bitter days and nights of Valley Forge, using plain soldiers as his heroes and making no attempt to inflate the heroic episode Washington, von Steuben, and Hamilton figure as minor characters. There is a note of quiet and thoughtful patriotism." New Yorker

 Claude; tr. and illus. by Lauren Ford. Macmillan 1937 265p illus o.p. 1941
 "‘Claude,’ in an admittedly autobiographical manner, details the idyllic childhood of six girls and three boys whose rich and sensitive fancies were given free rein in the sunny garden world of the little French town of Javresac. Claude was the youngest of the six Devereux sisters. It is she who jots down in a blue notebook the casual episodes of family life." N.Y. Times

 * Malaisie; tr. from the original French by Eric Sutton. Macmillan 1931 271p o.p. 1941
 "The author draws on his fifteen years' experience in the Malay Peninsula for the material of this book. Through the reactions of two sophisticated, thoughtful Frenchmen, who live lonely lives on rubber plantations and through their relations with the natives, he attempts to give an insight into the soul of Malaya. The narrative is highly intellectual and philosophical." Bkl.

 "The story of 'The Hamlet' is the story of the gradual sucking dry of Frenchman's Bend by Flem Snopes and his endless kin. . . There was Flem and Mink and I O, like the idiot, and the hideously untouched boy called Wall-street Panic. . . They fought among themselves with the obscure brutality of bacilli—but, when they were through, it was time for Flem Snopes to move on to Jefferson, for he had eaten the heart out of Frenchman's Bend."  The sound and the fury. Random house 1929 401p $2.50
 "A southern family of gentle blood is shown in decay, its members petty failures, drunkards, suicides, pathological perverts and idiots. Part One presents the tragedy as seen through the eyes of Benjy, the idiot son, a grown man thrown back into childhood by any chance sight or smell. . . In Part Two, we move back eighteen years and witness, through the workings of his mind, the last day in the life of Quentin, brother of Benjy and Caddy. Part Three brings us again into the present, where we look through the mean eyes of Jason, the third brother. And in the final part of the novel, in the author's direct narrative, the spectacle of white disintegration is shown and sharpened by the emphasis thrown upon Negro solidity." Outlook

 Chinaberry tree; a novel of American life. Stokes 1931 341p $2.50
 "This story of life among conventional middle-class negroes in a New Jersey town has none of the bitterness of racial conflict. Snobbery and social ostracism are as common there as in the corresponding levels of white communities, and Laurentine, the daughter of a negress and a white man, whose love had been genuine and unashamed, finds her illegitimacy a barrier in the colored world." * Come and get it. Doubleday 1935 518p $2.50

"To readers in Wisconsin, and perhaps to others, the most interesting parts of this book will be the chapters that picture, with a great deal of force and vitality, the early days in the lumber industry in this state. The hero of Miss Ferber's story is Barney Glasgow, who works up from the ranks to become the richest man in America. It is this likable old pirate who makes the story, and with his death it rather falls to pieces. Butte des Morts has been identified as Neenah-Menasha; Iron Ridge as Hurley." Wis. bul.

Jungle; a tale of the Amazon rubber-tappers; tr. from the Portuguese by Charles Duff. Viking 1935 340p o.p. 1941

"A sensitive young European, stranded in Brazil, permits himself to be sent up the great river by an ungenerous uncle with a gang of rubber-tappers. He goes through the mill, helpless as any of the other semi-slaves, and after several years, is lucky enough to get out and to return to Portugal again. What we seem to be reading is the literal record of what such a young man might see and feel, with nothing added to make a story. The real hero—or villain—of course is the jungle itself." "A mixture of history and fiction in which Terence the potter is foisted on Rome by an ex-senator as the real Nero, whom he resembles. Some see in the book an analogy to present-day political conditions in Germany." Bkl.

Success; a novel, tr. from the German by Willa and Edwin Muir. Viking 1930 781p o.p. 1941

"A story of life in post-war Bavaria which depicts its social, artistic and political aspects." Pratt quarterly

"The appeal of this long novel is to the intellect rather than the emotions. The subject is the unjust imprisonment of a man, the many people affected by his sentence, and the administration of justice in Bavaria. It might be applicable to any other country. A great number of characters are drawn clearly and with understanding." Bkl

Ugly duchess; tr. by Willa and Edwin Muir. Viking 1928 335p o.p. 1941

"A historical romance painted in grim, dark colors on a huge canvas of fourteenth century warring German states. It is based upon the life of Margarete, Countess of Tyrol, whose repulsive personality and political ambitions were more than counter-balanced by the viciousness and chicanery of her contemporaries. Some of the descriptions are brilliant and the historical background is well drawn." Bkl.

the time when her life was inextricably

love for delicate Nat Fortune whose bitter lot as a thwarted musician she was able,
for a little while, to alleviate, through the generous giving of herself. Long, leisurely

"The Bosworths, Dee and Ham, married less than a year and tired of their super-

Hollywood, financed by Dee's small legacy, and hopeful for a writing career for Ham.
But it was not so easy. The months dragged on, the money dwindled, food and lodging became a problem, and Midget, the dog, was the only member of the family to attain even a brief film success. A very light, human story, quite unsophisticated, of a young couple in love, and of their disappointments, of kindly tradespeople, and a few friendly workers, closing with a happy ending in prospect, but not in Hollywood. Disappointing in comparison with Miss Field's other books." Bkl.

"This comes closest of all Fielding's novels to actuality, for he was drawing upon his personal experiences as a London magistrate, and was anxious to show up the disorders of society in his pictures of li-centious pleasures, depravity and crime, and the horrors of Newgate. Amelia, 'the perfect model of an English wife,' he drew from his own first wife. It is the touching story of a married couple in an uphill

The author's intention was "to satirize Richardson's 'Pamela.' This novel, given to the world two years before, had depicted the struggle of an honest serving-maid to escape from the snares laid for her by her master. Andrews, the hero of Fielding's story, is a brother of Pamela, like her in service; and the narrative details the trials he endures in the perform-

"Lifted out of the ordinary class of medical novels by its range of ideas and its manner of narration. Its study of a biophysicist, the satisfactions he finds in his austere science, the impasse he has reached with his wife, and his later sexual experiences, is really a study in physical creativity. The boldness of some of the episodes, the staggering medical erudition, and the passages told in the stream of consciousness, all keep this from being a book for everybody, but it should appeal strongly both to those interested in problem novels and in literary technique."  "The 'twig' is the daughter of a mid-western university professor. A born lover of ease and pleasure, she resents the unpretentious life of her high-minded parents; but, in moments of indecision, finds herself drawing strength from their traditions and ideals" Pittsburgh
- Bonfire Harcourt 1933 408p $2.50
 "A richly detailed story of a Vermont village and of the destinies that were changed by the coming of a firebrand mountain girl, an adventuress in the making. The village nurse rescued her from a sordid backwoods environment, and in the two years that elapsed before she ran away to a wider field, lives were scarred and families disrupted. Serialized in 'Woman's Home Companion.'" Bkl

 "A serious and conscientious piece of writing, telling a story that begins with Matey Gilbert's childhood in a middle western college town, carries her to other college towns, to Europe on Sabbatical leaves, and finally to the little village on the Hudson where her family has its roots. Here she finds love and marriage and a simple, satisfying life, broken by a period of war work in France, and resumed afterwards, with a realization that life goes on, that there is never any going back."  "Mary Bascomb's passion for perfection and for ordering other people's lives suffers a rude shock when one day, without warning, her idolized, fatherless son brings home as his wife a cheap, ignorant and vulgar girl. With fine courage and resolution she sets about to adjust herself to an impossible situation and her character rises to the task. When a granddaughter is born, she wakes from her nightmare and vows that little Dids shall be rescued from her inheritance. The book becomes the story of her fight for the child—a winning fight, for Dids grows up a fine

"It isn't a story in the regular sense. There's no beginning, except the beginning of Amory Blaine, born healthy, wealthy and extraordinarily good-looking, and by way of being spoiled by a restless mother whom he quaintly calls by her first name, Beatrice. There's no middle to the story, except the closing picture of this same handsome boy, proud, cleanminded, born to conquer yet fumbling, at college and in love with Isabelle, then Clara, then Rosalind, then Eleanor. No end to the story except the closing picture of this same boy in his early twenties, a bit less confident about life . . . and yet determined to use to the utmost himself and his heritage from the personality he had passed." "Winner of the All-Nations Prize Novel Competition, this, the Hungarian entry, is the story of a group of post-war refugees in Paris. The Barabás children and their parents, furriers from Hungary, are the principal characters living with other international emigrés in the little Street of the Fishing Cat. Though widely diverse in nationality and political belief (among them are Lithuanian socialists, White Russians, French communists, and Spanish anarchists) a feeling of comradeship and common purpose binds them together. The joys and griefs, the fortunes and misadventures of the Barabás family form the central theme, and in the sense that theirs are emotions and experiences shared by the exiled group as a whole, the story acquires a larger humanitarian significance." 1937 363p maps o.p. 1941

"Eighteen-year-old Gonzalo, fired by the tales of returned sailors, joined Magellan's expedition and sailed from Spain in 1518 in search of the fabulous Spice Islands. Gonzalo survived starvation, mutiny, and savage cruelty only to be left stranded on an island. He lived with natives for seven years and when picked up by another Spanish vessel deserted it to return to his island home. There is little glamour about the historic expedition, made up of ill-treated crews and treacherous commanders, and Magellan is pictured as a hardly credible sadist, mean and unscrupulous in all his dealings." "Everyone is bound to enjoy the saga of Horatio Hornblower, the self-contained but lovable captain of H.M.S. frigate Lydia. When we meet him he's captain of the British frigate Lydia, in the time of the Napoleonic wars, at sea in the Pacific and making for a landfall on the Nicaraguan coast. . . He is to foment and assist an uprising by Don Julian Alvarado—El Supremo—against the Spanish. . . He outwits the Spanish man-of-war Natividad, captures her without losing a man, and turns over to El Supremo. But then when belated news comes in from Europe, he finds that he is now an ally of Spain and he has to reattack the Natividad. . . In volume

Cow thief trail. Morrow 1937 279p o.p. 1941

When Miles Trask—ex-soldier, ex-cowboy, and now an officer of the law—came back to the hard cow-country around Trampas, he was glad to find two old friends—a couple of drift-fence riders on the 200-mile range fence on the boundary between Texas and New Mexico. It seemed that cattle were sprouting wings in a wholesale exodus from Texas, by way of the "cow thief trail"; and Miles had been assigned to find out how—and from whom—the cattle came

"Driven to desperation by the sordid materialism surrounding him, a disillusioned young newspaper man takes his family to a remote small town to begin life again. In old family papers he learns something of the history of his father and grandfather, and finds that they too, in pursuit of a vague dream and an elusive ideal, escaped from their hampering environment and sought freedom. Not wholly convincing, and necessarily disconnected, but suggestive of the romantic aspirations that contributed to the building of America." Bkl.

"The old story of the beautiful but poverty stricken young troupier who attains success as an actress and happiness in marriage to the rich young son of her benefactor. The first part of the book, with its crude lingo of the show world and its realistic pictures of vaudeville life, is entertaining; when conditions begin to improve for the heroine, the appeal is mainly sentimental. Character parts afford amusement and pathos." Bkl.

The wanderer; tr. from the French by Françoise Delisle. Houghton 1928 306p $2.50

"Transcribing in large part scenes and episodes from his own youth in rural France, the author, subsequently killed in the war, has written a simple yet compelling tale of a French schoolboy and visionary who looms an epic figure even to his schoolfellows. They call him Le grand Meaulnes, which is the title of the French original. His story is an adolescent search for an ideal, glimpsed, won, lost, and forever sought. The introductory biographical sketch and tribute is by Havelock Ellis." Book rev. digest

Frank, Bruno, 1887-

Lost heritage; tr. by Cyrus Brooks. Viking 1937 297p o.p. 1941

of the Nazi régime and is unwittingly drawn into a royalist plot. His life is spared and he is taken across the border, but he returns to rescue his old tutor from a concentration camp. They escape to England to start a new life, and he finds a Jewish girl, another refugee, to share it" Bkl.

- * A man called Cervantes; tr. by H. T. Lowe-Porter. Viking 1935 301p o.p. 1941

"Although this story of the creator of Don Quixote is necessarily more fiction than biography, it is in accord with the known facts of Cervantes's life, and is probable and consistent in its picture of the Spain that Cervantes knew. Some passages will offend conservative readers" Bkl.

Persians are coming; tr. from the German by H. T. Lowe-Porter. Knopf 1929 139p o.p. 1941

"Written with great delicacy and subtlety, this dramatic novel carries the plot through a series of political discussions between two idealistic statesmen, the German, Carmer, and the Frenchman, Dorval. A brilliant and thought-provoking plea for internationalism." Baltimore Enoch Pratt library

Frank, Leonhard, 1882-

Carl and Anna; tr. from the German by Cyrus Brooks. Putnam 1930 149p illus o.p. 1941

"Carl and Richard, prisoners of war, spend four years together in an Eastern prison camp. Richard describes his wife Anna and their home life in such detail to Carl that the latter feels he knows her too, and grows to love her. When he escapes from prison he goes to find her, and tells her he is her husband; while Anna cannot believe this, the quality of the love she and Carl come to have for each other overcomes her scruples of conscience. But finally Richard, the true husband, is released and makes his way home, to find Carl and Anna together. They pity Richard's misery, but nothing can separate them" Book rev. digest

Frankau, Gilbert, 1884-

Dangerous years; a trilogy. Dutton 1938 686p $2.50

Contents: Pre-war; Post-war; Present day

"The course of family life in England's minor aristocracy is followed meticulously in this leisurely history of the Carterets, from the time the father died on the 'Titanic' until the youngest son was killed defending the Alcazar. They were conventional and almost feudal in their family solidarity, in spite of the differences between generations, and no one suspected that Lady Carteret lived always in dread that time would reveal her secret—the paternity of her youngest son, the one child who never conformed to pattern" Bkl.

Royal regiment; a novel of contemporary behaviours. Dutton 1939 532p $2.50 (W)

A story of modern England, the plot of which, based upon a conflict of love and duty, of personal desires and discipline, parallels the history of the Duke of Windsor's abdication

Three Englishmen; a romance of married lives. Dutton 1935 640p o.p. 1941

"The three Englishmen whose stories are here told were boys together at Eton just before the Boer war and lifetime friends thereafter. Upon leaving school one becomes a professional soldier, the second a scientist, and the third a business man. The novel follows the course of their lives, their loves and their careers during the last thirty odd years, set against a background of English life and history during that period." Down in the valley. Holt 1930 321p $2.50

"This is a simple and idyllically beautiful story of a prosperous English business man who was drawn, little by little, to the farming life his grandparents had given up, fell in love with a rustic lass, and at last settled down in good earnest as a farmer." Sat rev. of lit.

Hester and her family; a romance. Holt 1935 483p o.p. 1941

"Study of the evolution of an English lower-class family. Hester was the illegitimate daughter of an itinerant drover. At fourteen she left the orphan asylum and went to work on a farm. From there she passed to service at the rectory, but left to marry when it became apparent that she was to have a child. For a few years she made the most of her lot with her poor stick of a husband, but her real happiness came when he left her and she set up housekeeping with another man, who loved and understood her. Combined with the story of Hester's later years are the stories of her four children, especially that of Jenny, her oldest daughter." Book rev. digest

* Joseph and his brethren. Holt 1929 372p o.p. 1941

"An English novel that belongs in the group with 'Growth of the soil' and 'Giants in the earth.' The story of an English farm and of the family, father and sons, who devote their lives to it. The father marries a young wife, and dies leaving the farm to her. The wife marries a wastrel and the farm goes to ruin, ultimately coming back into the possession of the brothers, its rightful inheritors." Wis. bul.

* Jörn Uhl, tr. by F. S. Delmer. Smith, P. 416p $2

First published 1905 by Estes
"An intensely realistic and moving story of German provincial life just before, and after the Franco-German War. There is a brilliant sketch of the Battle of Gravelotte, as well as other war allusions, so the book—though primarily depicting the mental and spiritual development of the young peasant hero—is well entitled to a place among novels illustrating the life and events of the period." Nield

Pastor of Poggsee; tr. by K G Potts. Houghton 1931 404p $2.50

"The pastor is an unusual and arresting figure, a rich and vigorous personality, yet in relation to his people patient and plodding. The novel is long and detailed and when, in the later chapters, the war breaks in on the peace and happiness of the pastor's family it gives a new view of the havoc wrought." Wis bul

Freuchen, Peter, 1886-

Eskimo; tr. by A. P. Maerker-Branden and Elsa Branden. Liveright 1931 504p o.p. 1941

"A novel of Eskimo life within the arctic circle. It is the saga of Mala, a great hero among his people because of his prowess as a hunter. Mala flies with his family after a murder has been committed, is imprisoned by white men, escapes, and finally perishes with the last of his family, his aged wife." Book rev. digest

Ivalu, the Eskimo wife; tr. by Janos Jusztis and E. P. Ehrich Furman 1935 332p $2.50

"Story of a young Eskimo woman from her childhood, when in one terrible winter disease and famine nearly wiped out her clan, to her young womanhood and her marriage with a white man, a Danish explorer who had taken up life among the Eskimos. The story is supposed to be based on the author's own experiences and his marriage with an Eskimo girl." Book rev. digest

Friedenthal, Richard, 1896-

White gods; tr. from the German by C. H. Lumley. Harper 1931 424p illus o.p. 1941

"An account in fiction form, of the conquest of Mexico by Cortez and of the part played by his Indian mistress Marina." Book rev. digest

"There is nothing new, but there is a great deal of high color laid on the story. The author has not spared the sensibilities of his readers, nor does he shrink from gruesome details. He can be as devilish and savory as Goya, as terrifying as Poe, as blood-curdling as Monk Lewis or as Edgar Allan Poe. Where history is silent the apocalyptic imagination of Herr Friedenthal fills a gap." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

"Uncle Snowball, the Haywards' hired man, had arrived unexpectedly on their New England farm in the midst of a snowstorm and had stayed seventeen years. He had periodic drinking bouts and fits of wanderlust, but he always returned to the family he loved. The book describes one year in the lives of Will and Nancy Hayward, with their eight children to add fun to almost any situation. Grandma to exercise her straight-laced disapproval of Snowball, and Uncle Snowball, father confessor and friend to all the family—except Grandma." Book rev. digest

Lonesome road. Little 1927 316p $2.50

"A third story of the Kentucky mountain whites. Jared's grandfather, Preacher Stoll, hastens his wife's death by insisting on baptising her in the river in the middle of winter. Grief-stricken, the old man dies not long after. The double tragedy ends Jared's boyhood. His no less unhappy manhood begins when he is victimized by the mountain girl who made his best friend a murderer, marries her, and is deserted by her. Jared has inherited his grandfather's stark fidelity to principle. This carries him thru tragedy to triumph, and to ultimate happiness." Book rev. digest

"The struggle of the young generation to go away and the old to keep them from going is presented in this appealing story of seventy-year-old Papa La Fleur, who lived with his two daughters on the bank of a river near Portage, Wisconsin. The elder daughter, after college, had had her chance in the city. How Linnie, the younger, achieved a partial freedom which resulted indirectly in the accidental drowning of her father is recounted simply, with a skillful economy of words. The story reflects the atmosphere and history of the region, recalling the canoes of French explorers when those of the power company's surveyors arrive." Bkl

"In 'Maid in waiting' Dinny Charwell was concerned mainly with her brother Hubert's troubles; in 'Flowering wilder-ostracized Wilfred Desert. This last novel of the trilogy, which chronicles the affairs of the Charwells, family connections of the Forsytes, was completed some months before Mr. Galsworthy's death. In it Dinny's chief interest is with her young sister Clare's divorce from a sadistic husband and her eventual acceptance, temporarily at least, of an irregular love affair. Dinny herself, after news of Wilfred's drowning in Siam, finally makes her decision to

- Snow-water. Doubleday 1939 360p $2.50
 (W)

The scene of the story is Bartorville, Colorado, midway between Denver and Cheyenne. It chronicles the career of the town's founder, Daniel Bartor, from 1863, when he first saw the possibilities of the site while scouting for Indians, to 1934, when due to his irrigation projects the town had become prosperous, and Daniel himself, surrounded by his numerous descendants was celebrating his sixty-fifth wedding anniversary

 The bait was two thousand dollar bills and the torn half of a ten-thousand dollar note. Perry Mason took the bait and became involved in the solution of a mysterious murder case

- Case of the caretaker's cat; a Perry Mason mystery. Pocket bks 242p pa 25c

First published 1935 by Morrow

Detective Perry Mason

"The apparently simple legal question that a caretaker, pensioned under a will, should be allowed to keep his pet cat develops into a complicated plot of intrigues and seemingly unrelated murders. Some of the action is sensational and highly improbable but the outcome will satisfy the detective fans." Hunting

- Case of the counterfeit eye. Grosset 304p 85c

First published 1935 by Morrow

"Perry Mason, that clever, resourceful lawyer, again solves a baffling case. On the very day that Peter Brunold reports the loss of one of his counterfeit eyes, a murdered man is found with a glass eye in his hand. The complicated case is ably handled by Perry who, representing the defense, frees the accused and cleverly traps the slayer into betraying himself." Hunting

- Case of the curious bride. Grosset 296p
 50c

First published 1934 by Morrow

"Like the other Perry Mason stories, this one moves so swiftly that it keeps the reader in a constant state of tension and leaves him a little out of breath at the end." N.Y. Times

- Case of the haunted husband. Morrow 1941 281p $2

Also available from Grosset at 85c

"A young girl was hitchhiking to Hollywood when a terrible automobile accident occurred, and the driver of the car disappeared leaving her to take the blame. Perry Mason unearths many complicated angles before he solves the case and clears the innocent girl." Washington, D. C.

- Case of the howling dog. Grosset 295p 50c

First published 1934 by Morrow

A howling dog, a will, a man who had run away with another man's wife, and a young housekeeper goes to make this "Perry Mason" mystery

- Case of the lame canary. Morrow 1937 281p o.p. 1941

Her name was Rita Swaine. She was young and attractive, and she came into Perry Mason's office with a caged canary and a hard luck story about her sister's domestic troubles. It obviously wasn't a case for Perry Mason, who specialized in homicides. But then Perry noticed the canary was lame, his curiosity got the better of him and he plunged straight into the case

- Case of the perjured parrot. Grosset 280p
 85c

First published 1939 by Morrow

A Perry Mason detective story including an exceedingly profane green parrot, a pretty young librarian with a curious interest in dangerous weapons, an eccentric multi-millionaire, with a penchant for books, trailers and birds, and an apparently un-traceable murder, committed with a double-barreled derringer, obsolete in design but deadly in efficiency

- Case of the shoplifter's shoe

In Gardner, E. S. Erle Stanley Gardner's Big mystery book v 1

- Case of the silent partner. Morrow 1940 278p $2 (W)

Also available from Grosset at 85c

"Perry Mason traces an elusive criminal through a maze of intricate crime, including some crooked stock transactions, a poisoned night club hostess, and a murdered man." Hunting

- Case of the stuttering bishop. Grosset 276p 85c

First published 1936 by Morrow

"His interest in a Bishop who stuttered led Perry Mason into an amazing adventure, in which every question seemed only to trail other questions in its wake. As the lawyer puts it, he adds two and two together, and they make, first, six, then twelve. In this case they make an exciting case for Perry Mason, and a swift, puzzling and brilliantly enjoyable tale." N.Y. Times

- Case of the substitute face. Grosset 308p
 85c

First published 1938 by Morrow

"Perry Mason, Della Street, and a fugitive clerk discover strange doings on a trans-Pacific liner. Perry solves his case in a typical court-room climax." Hunting

- Case of the sulky girl. Grosset 303p 50c

First published 1933 by Morrow

Fran Celane looked sulky and she said she wanted to get married. That was what started one of Perry Mason's most exciting cases. The girl's uncle and guardian, Edward Norton, had threatened to cut her off from her fortune if she did marry. That was why she came to Perry Mason one afternoon for help Pocahontas; or The nonparell of Virginia.

Harcourt 1933 344p o.p. 1941

"The story of the famous American Indian princess whose tomb is in St George's church at Gravesend, giving a vivid and authentic picture of Virginia and its aboriginal inhabitants during the years 1606 to 1617, the arrival of the English adventures in 1607, and the death of Pocahontas in 1617. The history covers much ground, and such differing pictures as manual labours of Powhatan, the figure of Ben Jonson, and the immortal Sir Walter Raleigh whom Pocahontas meets when she is a guest at the court of King James the First. A worth-while book for its painstaking research, and its fascination in subject and presentation." Ontario library review

"Narrative of adventures in Mukden and the neighbouring parts at the time of British intervention in Russian affairs. The world is upside-down, and the chaos is reflected in the confusing nature of the story. . . . The 'hero' is in love with an empty-headed girl, and half the story is about his vacillations and self-questionings." Baker's Best

"A delightful little story, concerning a love affair between a captivating Chinese lady and a French doctor, told from his angle. . . . The two chief protagonists are temperamentally and educationally poles apart, but for a brief span of time find intense joy in each other's society. Fragmentary episodes sustain the story. Szechwan, 2,000 miles in the interior of China, still almost untouched by modern progress, forms the background." N.Y. Times

 "Set in a Victorian framework, this novel pokes amiable fun at the pathetic weaknesses of the Wither household in Essex—Mr Wither, a tight-fisted mid-Victorian, ruling his family with a hand of iron; his weak wife who wants only respectability for the family; Tina, a repressed daughter of thirty-five reading books on sex psychology; Madge, another daughter, who sublimates her love for a soldier in love for her dog; Saxon, the chauffeur, out to uphold his name which has been besmirched by his parents and who marries Tina; and Viola, widowed daughter-in-law, who marries the county's most eligible bachelor. All the characters live happily ever after, each achieving his wish." Book rev. digest

 "The scene is laid in Ireland. It is story of the Widow O'Hara, her two sons Jim and Dinny, and Jim's wife, Moira, all of them living on a comfortable farm. Because she was jealous of the younger woman, Mrs O'Hara made life miserable for her by her constant nagging, and Jim, being a plodding soul did not realize what was wrong until Moira left him.  "The story of a motherless English girl brought up by her artist father, who taught her not to be afraid of tradition, to stand on her own feet and to be honest. Nancy grows up a true modern, frank and honest in all things but without sacrificing her delicacy and reticence. Her love story, begun in Paris where her father sent her as a part of her education, has a cruel interruption which for a time robs her of her faith in love itself, but years later it comes to fulfillment thru her steadfastness and courage. The best thing in the book is the friendship between Nancy and her father." Book rev. digest

First published 1937 by Doubleday
"Following the defeat of the White Russians, the Markov family, remnants of the old aristocracy, escaped to Turkey. Destitute, and with no training for self-support they fled to Vienna, then to Berlin and Paris, meeting everywhere other exiles who had no place in the world. The long story of their wandering pictures a little-known phase of post-war Europe and brings in many well-known figures." Bkl

"Through the experiences of a young American foreign correspondent, his sister, their friends, and relatives in various countries, the author traces public sentiment and national attitudes toward the critical events of the past two years. From the abdication to the Czechoslovak crisis conversations reveal contrasting states of mind; the viewpoint is English, and Chamberlain emerges as 'knight-errant of peace.' Joy of man's desiring, tr. by K. A. Clarke Viking 1940 458p $2.50

"Poetically written novel about a wandering acrobat, with a hedonistic philosophy of life, who comes to a lonely plateau in southern France. There he finds the peasant farmers struggling to gain a living, add to their savings, and nothing more. He settles down with them and gradually imbues them with his ideas of beauty. The farmers reduce their plantings, make friends with a stag and his family, plant their fallow fields with narcissi, and learn to like the new way of living. Then tragedy enters the earthly paradise and the acrobat departs." Book rev. digest

Enchanted winter, by Martin Hare (pseud.). 1933 316p o.p. 1941

Published in England under title: But-ler's gift

"Philip Silver, a Liverpool bank clerk, went to spend six months with a distant cousin to learn the ways of life among the Irish landed gentry before coming into his inheritance of an Irish estate. But the cousin was a Church of England clergyman, and very poor. Life in the rectory was poverty-stricken, disorderly, and slightly crazy. . . . the inheritance was a myth, but still it was an enchanted winter. An amusing book, charming and inconsequential as its own unique characters." Bkl.

 Gladkov, Fedor Vasil'evich, 1883-
 Cement; tr. from the Russian by A. S. Arthur and C. Ashleigh. Int. pubs. 1929 311p $2.50
 "Gladkov's narrative arises out of the turbulence of the Revolution. He portrays life under the Soviet rule—life as it affects the individual, but even more important than that, life as it is represented in the relationship of the masses to the economic policies of the nation. Through this story of a typical Soviet community run the interwoven threads of life of Gleb and Dasha—the inevitable human equation that even the ruthless system of nationalization or socialization cannot obliterate." New republic

Twisted tenril; a story of eighteen sixty-five. Stokes 1928 311p o.p. 1941

"A biographical novel which partially explains John Wilkes Booth—lover, actor and fanatical patriot, queer combination of egotist and martyr. Scenes of stage life are particularly well done, as is the portrayal of the two women who loved him, and the weak youth with whom he spent his last days." Wis. bul.

* Barren ground. Doubleday 1925 511p y $2.50

Also available from Modern Lib. at 95c
"The first realistic novel that has ever been written of Virginia, or for that matter of the South. Miss Glasgow has got away from old mammy tales, and . . . has drawn on life, not on scenery or sentiment, for her material. She has written of Virginia as impersonally as Thomas Hardy has of Wessex." Edmund Fitzgerald in International book review

y Battle-ground. Doubleday 1920 512p $2.50

"The first part is a sympathetic and oftentimes humorous portrayal of the life of wealthy Virginians before secession. The second half is a vivid picture of the war . . . rather the mournful underside of the war than the heroic. . . Fair to both sides, though as a whole a representation of the southern tragedy." The deliverance; a romance of the Virginia tobacco fields. Doubleday 1904 543p illus $2.50

"Story of Virginia life since the Civil war. It has to do with a family impoverished by the war, whose estate falls into the hands of the former overseer. Love and revenge and class-feeling are the fundamental forces." Pittsburgh

* In this our life. Harcourt 1941 467p $2.50 (W)

"The story revolves around the father of a family, a man who has given all the years of his life to the service of others, who has accepted circumstances humbling to his pride, because he put others first, who has bowed to the dictates of the circle in which he lives. Now, on the verge of finding freedom for himself, he is caught once more in the turning wheel of fate." Kirkus

Romantic comedians. Doubleday 1926 346p $2.50

"Irony and pathos mingle in this masterly version of the old story of an elderly man's love for a young wife. Judge Gamaliel Honeywell, who seeks youth at sixty-five, and Annabel Upchurch, a lovely, restless girl of twenty-three, are the protagonists in this tragedy of frustration." Cleveland

Sheltered life. Doubleday 1932 395p o.p. 1941

"Eva Birdsong, a famous Southern beauty, who was deeply in love with her charming but unfaithful husband, tried by sheer grace and courage to cover up the unhappiness of her marriage. For many years she was at least partially successful. When she discovered Jenny Blair, the beloved grand-daughter of her friend General Blair in her husband's arms it was the final blow. The rest was tragedy." Book rev. digest

* They stooped to folly; a comedy of morals. Doubleday 1929 351p $2.50

* Vein of iron. Harcourt 1935 462p $2.50 y

"Generations of Fincastles, possessed of fortitude and strength, stretch behind the family eking out a sorry livelihood in an old manse in the Great Valley of Virginia. What this heritage means is exemplified in the life of Ada Fincastle who after years of difficult living in a tidewater city, feels the dead generations 'reaching out to her in adversity,' and with her husband, to whom she in turn is 'a rock to lean on,' returns to the old home, to start over again from the very bottom. A thoughtful, searching study of character under the stress of both immemorial and modern problems." N.Y. libraries

Glassell, Susan, 1882-

Ambrose Holt and family. Stokes 1931 315p o.p. 1941

"This novel breathes, from the first word to the last, the clear air of reality. It deals with marriage as a life to be lived, not as a situation to be evaded. Without fuss or flurry it conveys more drama than twenty novels labeled 'powerful' and 'dramatic.' The writing, simple and businesslike, takes its clear beauty from the theme. Miss Glassell belongs to that very small band of novelists whom we can trust. She will give us the truth as she sees it. . . In its mingling of wisdom with grace, and in the felicity of its expression, this novel is outstanding." Spectator

* Morning is near us; a novel. Stokes 1940 296p $2.50 (W)

"The central character, Lydia, is haunted through the early years of her life by her unknown past, and it is only when inheritance brings her back to the place of her birth, that the unravelling of the mystery sets her free to be wholly herself." Kirkus

Goethe, Ferdynand, 1890-

From day to day; tr. by Winifred Cooper; foreword by John Galsworthy. Viking 1931 292p o.p. 1941

"The first of this author's work to appear in English is an experiment in novel writing, dexterously and successfully handled. In it a Pole is writing a novel based on his own past life, of the period when as a prisoner of war, separated for years from his wife, he had fallen in love with a young girl who bore him a son. Side by side with the novel, as he writes it, appear the pages of the diary of his present life, recording his growing estrangement from his wife. In the end novel and diary merge." Bkl.

* Sorrows of young Werther; newly tr. into English by William Rose. Scholartis press, London 1929 126p illus o.p. 1941

First published in German in 1774; in English in 1779

"Certain passages between Goethe himself and some friends and the suicide of a disappointed young man gave him the outline of a story that reflected a phase of his own emotional history. An ardent idealist falls hopelessly in love, and dies rather than face the anguish of renunciation. Written in the form of a journal (1771-2), it is an intimate and poignant study of a mind diseased, and therewithal a dramatic picture of the people and the society among whom his lot was cast." The religious element in the book is a strong one and predominates over that of the love theme." H. R. Keller's Reader's digest of books

Appeared serially in the "Outlook"

The prospector; a tale of the Crow's Nest Pass, by Ralph Connor [pseud.]. Revell 1904 401p o.p. 1941

"The story of the life of a young miner who goes from the university of Toronto to his work of self-sacrifice in the wilds. He is affectionately called the Prospector because he untiringly seeks out lonely ranches and brings their owners into touch with their distant neighbors. There are vivid pictures of Canadian frontier life and character, and there is, of course, a love interest." Book rev. digest

Rock and the river; a romance of Quebec, by Ralph Connor [pseud.]. Dodd 1931 377p o.p. 1941

"This long historical novel has as its scene Quebec and the Canadian border at the outbreak of the War of 1812. A patriotic young Canadian falls in love with an American girl but is obliged to live through many dangers before winning her. Written from a Canadian point of view." Bkl.

Sky pilot; a tale of the foothills, by Ralph Connor [pseud.]. Grosset 309p o.p. 1941

First published 1899 by Revell

"Stories of rough life in the far West. Sketches of cowboy life and character, and of the mountains and the prairies, with a pervasive tinge of religious sentiment. The Sky Pilot is a saintly young evangelist, who converts the turbulent ranchers in a little frontier village of the Rockies, and then dies." Baker's Best

Contents: Chelkash; One autumn evening; Affair of the clasps; Creatures that once were men; Notch; Chums; Twenty-six men and a girl; Cain and Artyom; Red; Evil-doers; Birth of a man; Going home; Lullaby; Hermit; Karamora

Bystander; tr. from the Russian by B. G. Guerny Appleton-Century 1930 729p $3

The first volume of the tetralogy narrates the childhood and youth of Clim Samghin through whose eyes are reflected the conflicts and restlessness of pre-war Russia. The story closes with the coronation of Czar Nicholas

Followed by "The magnet," "Other fires" and "The specter"

Creatures that once were men; tr. from the Russian by J. M. Shirazi and others. Modern lib. 249p o.p. 1941

Analyzed in Index to short stories

Contents: Creatures that once were men; Twenty-six men and a girl; Chelkash; My fellow-traveller; On a raft

Decadence; tr. by Veronica Dewey. McBride 1927 357p o.p. 1941

"The rise, decline and ultimate degeneration of a Russian peasant family, turned merchants. The Artamonovs, as they become rich, are shorn of the virile qualities which enabled them to climb. Three generations (from the emancipation of the serfs, 1861, to the Revolution of 1917) sweep the hapless descendants into the dust heap" Publisher's note

Foma Gordyeeff; tr. from the Russian by I. F. Hapgood. Scribner 1901 448p illus o.p. 1941

"A great piece of realism and spiritual insight, though formless, and overburdened with Nietzschean philosophy. Foma Gordyeff (Thomas the Proud) is the son and heir of a rich merchant but is oppressed by the falsehood and viciousness of conventional life, and wears himself out in blind efforts to find an outlet for his natural energies. The merchant classes at Nyni Nougorod, the teeming life of the Volga, are portrayed with intense realism." Baker's Best

Life of Clim Samghin

A tetralogy containing the following: The bystander; The magnet; Other fires; The specter

The magnet; tr. from the Russian by Alexander Bakshy. Appleton-Century 1931 839p $3

Continuation of "Bystander" carrying the story of Clim Samghin, a Russian intellectual through the university, journalism and a law office from 1894 to the Russo-Japanese war and the Bloody Sunday of January 22, 1905 in St Petersburg

Followed by "Other fires"

* Mother. Appleton-Century 1907 499p $2

Story is woven about the figure of an old woman who, after the death of her brutal husband, is touched by the spirit of the revolution. To this cause she gives her only son and for this cause she dies

Other fires; tr. from the Russian by Alexander Bakshy. Appleton-Century 1933 506p $3

"The third volume of this panoramic novel of Russian life takes the chief character, Clim Samghin through the Moscow uprising of 1905, the spasmodic fighting that followed, and the suppression of the insurrection in 1906. Samghin, now thirty-five, is still an onlooker rather than a participant, and the events, seen through his eyes, seem unreal and lacking in significance. The previous volumes were 'Bystander' and 'The magnet.'" Bkl.

Followed by "The specter"

The specter; tr. from the Russian by Alexander Bakshy. Appleton-Century 1938 679p $3.50

Sequel to "Other fires." The fourth and last volume of the series covers the period from 1906 to 1917. Chum is now a full-grown member of the intellectual proletariat watching the seething political events which foreshadow the "specter" of the Revolution

Gorman, Herbert Sherman, 1893-

Jonathan Bishop Farrar 1933 433p $2.50

"Jonathan was a young New Englander full of democratic ideals and ambitions. In Paris, at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, he endured the siege of that city only to become embroiled in the turmoil of the commune and impressed into its army. Unable to reconcile his theories with the actualities, but convinced of the futility of fanaticism, he becomes a victim of the violence he hated. Through it all, like a scarlet thread, sometimes dominant, sometimes subordinate, is his passion for the beautiful courtesan Denyse, who is in turn the mistress of royalist, democrat, and communist, and always a spy." Bkl

Mountain and the plain. Farrar 1936 653p op 1941

"Story of the French revolution, written along historical lines and characterizing the main leaders. An American and a French commoner become friends and fall in love with the same French noblewoman, thereby furnishing the pathos and romantic suspense. The horrors of the revolution are realistically painted; the sympathy of the author is not with the revolutionists." Bkl.

"Jocelyn Irvin, dispirited because of a wound received in the Boer war, traveled down to the peaceful little English cathedral city of Torminster, there to visit his saintly old grandfather, Canon Fordyce. Practically forced to open a bookshop in a tiny house in the city, Jocelyn became interested in the writings of a former occupant, Ferranti, who had disappeared in the finishing and producing of a play of Ferranti's. Jocelyn helped himself and others, especially the charming child Henrietta, Canon Fordyce's adopted grandchild." Book rev digest

"Oxford in the days of Queen Elizabeth is the scene of this story of Canon Gervas Leigh of Christ Church, and his family of eight motherless children. Walter Raleigh and Philip Sidney, young scholars at the time, are among the characters, and Queen Elizabeth herself makes a six-days' visit to the university and stays at the house of Canon Leigh. But the daily life in a sixteenth century home of the better class is the main theme of the book, which has two youthful romances threaded thru it." Bok rev. digest

"The author of this book, a German, rejected an offer to become the official novelist of the National-Socialist Party. Instead, he escaped to America and wrote the story of his Mother and of the pattern of growth of his peasant family. While other members of the family succumbed to the swift political and national developments, the Mother and this son found life in the soil, and this book is his testament of faith in the enduring things of life."

Balkan monastery; a novel. Stokes 1936 328p o.p. 1941
"A vivid and convincing story of a band of orphaned children sheltered in a Serbian monastery during the first world war. The tides of war sweep over them, the monks are driven out, the children are abandoned and left to their own resources. Some die, others are scattered and lost. The little heroine, Desa, survives and is reunited with her father and brother, of the Serbian army. The author succeeds in preserving the charm and sweetness of childhood in the midst of all the horror"

Man of iron by Richard Dehan (pseud.). Stokes 1915 667p o.p. 1941
"An historical romance dealing more especially with Bismarck and the Franco-German War. Covers the chief battles ending with Paris beleaguered, 27th January, 1871. The novel shows the author's knowledge of the period, but it is somewhat marred by its prolixity and an occasional coarseness of tone." Nield

Antigua stamp Random house 1937
326p o.p. 1941

"An amusing, unlikely, and extremely clever account of a quarrel between a brother and sister over a postage stamp. This is no ordinary stamp, however, and no ordinary quarrel. A lifelong enmity, several lawsuits, and much intricate conniving are involved." New Yorker

* Claudius, the god and his wife Messalina. Smith, H. 1935 583p illus map o.p. 1941

Sequel to "I, Claudius"

"The troublesome reign of Tiberius Claudius Caesar, Emperor of the Romans (born B.C. 10, died A.D. 54), as described by himself; also his murder at the hands of the notorious Agrippina (mother of the Emperor Nero) and his subsequent deification, as described by others." Subtitle "A vivid picture of profligate Rome during the years in which Claudius conquered Britain and instituted many reforms at home. A story complete in itself, though a continuation of 'I, Claudius.'" Bkl.

The "chief characters are the fickle Justinian, a man whose delusions of grandeur were half realized, half of disastrous consequence, and his wife, Theodora, a great woman. With them, as in history, he associates the greatest soldier of his time, the last great Roman conqueror, Belisarius, an able, simple, honest man, come to greatness in a time of corruption, and ending his life in blindness, having been reduced to beggary." Book-of-the-month club news

I, Claudius, from the autobiography of Tiberius Claudius, born B. C. 10, murder and defied A. D. 54. Modern lib. 427p 95c

First published 1934 by Smith & Haas "This realistic story purports to be the famous lost autobiography of Emperor Claudius, the historian. The background—imperial Rome, with its political conspiracy, murderous citizens, superstitions, bestial orgies, and incest—is vividly pictured. The most fascinating figure is Livia, grandmother of Claudius, whose passion for power is unbounded. The author sustains his illusion so well that this work of imagination has the effect of history. It is full of drama and excitement." Bkl.

- Wake and remember. Macmillan 1936 412p $2.50

"The chief characters are urbane, not grossly wealthy, 'summer people' in the Minnesota village of Genesis. . . The story concerns a youngish widower, a man of acute, sensitive, at times slightly morbid intelligence. Life has been to him an irrelevant and bothersome dream for the year since the death of his wife, a woman so vital that the radiance of her memory blurs his perception of everything but his unique loss. . . Eventually life draws him from his circling back-eddy into its own mid-current." Sat. rev. of lit.

climbs to the top of her profession—the most sought-after milliner in Paris. A sympathetic and charmingly written story." Hunting

Reader, I married him. Dutton 1931 288p $2.50

"The Douglass family, exuding Southern charm in the American colony of Paris, are the financially irresponsible and light-minded characters in this novel. The story concerns Catherine in particular—how she falls in love with Gilbert, a very selfish young man who wants to marry for money; how Nesta, who practices witchcraft, helps her to win Gilbert; and why Catherine really doesn't want Gilbert after she marries him." Book rev. digest

* The Selbys. Dutton 1930 291p $2.50

"An impishly gay tale of the experiences of a young Georgia girl, spending three years with her aunt and uncle, the Selbys, in Paris, to have her corners rounded and be successfully married off. The most diverting character is Aunt Virginia Selby, a spirited, voluble Atlantan who is firmly entrenched in the Paris of the 'haute bourgeoisie' and is the admiration of a colony of American expatriates whom she despises heartily as having lost their native flavor and being 'neither flesh, fowl nor good red herring.'" Cleveland

Silent duchess. Harper 1939 356p $2.50 (W)

Avarice house; tr. from the French by M. A. Best. Harper 1927 358p o.p. 1941

"Three generations of women live in Ashley House, a neglected old house in rural Virginia. Kate Fletcher, a brooding, vindictive miser, rules her mother and her sixteen-year-old daughter Emily, denying them proper heat, food and clothing. When Emily does break away from her mother's tyranny, stark tragedy is the result. A powerful, exceedingly unpleasant story." Cleveland

Closed garden; tr. from the French by H. L. Stuart. Harper 1928 398p o.p. 1941

"A psychological study of a morbid state of mind due to restraint, monotony and loneliness. The protagonist is a young girl in a French provincial town who, because she has nothing else to occupy her mind, falls in love with an elderly man to whom she has never spoken, and quarreling with her father over her infatuation, accidentally kills him. The gloomy story is mainly concerned with her gradual mental disintegration from remorse and terror." Cleveland

Dark journey; tr. from the French by Vyvyan Holland. Harper 1929 376p o.p. 1941

"The setting of this modern French romantic novel is a provincial French village. Madame Londe, a restaurant-keeper, holds her boarders to her table by selling, in addition to her viands, the youthful favors of Angèle. A tutor named Guéret falls violently in love with the little prostitute, but when he learns her past hopelessly disfigures her. The outcome of the story is extremely tragic. A beautifully written and artistically well integrated book, but too depressing for most tastes." Bkl.

Then shall the dust return; tr. from the French by James Whitall. Harper 1941 290p $2.50 (W)

"A novel in three parts loosely linked by the spell of an ancient chain cast up by the sea. In a foreword the author explains that the time covered is a thousand years, during which 'two beings spiritually united by an unconquerable attraction, meet from century to century, recognize and love one another.' Throughout the three tales . . . runs a strong strain of the strange and mystical." Library Journal

Green, Paul, 1894-

This body the earth. Harper 1935 422p o.p. 1941

"Alvin Barnes is the son of a trifling, shiftless, holy-rolling cropper. He realizes, as a young boy, that there can be a decency and dignity to human life and determines to rise above his class. He scrimps, works like a mule, tries to educate himself. Finally, a grown man, he acquires (on paper) a few acres of his own. He marries the prettiest girl he knows. All his dreams seem to be coming true . . . then, suddenly, everything goes to pieces. His wife deserts him, he loses his little farm, a jury sends him to prison for crippling his wife's lover in a fist-fight. When he comes back from the torments of the prison farm he is a broken and defeated man, his lungs gone, his great strength sapped, fit only for the grave." New republic

Shadow on the mesa. Dodd 1933 287p o.p. 1941

"When Gerald Sommers came back to his home near the Mexican border after a fifteen years' absence he found that his father had been murdered, his ranch sold, and another man was masquerading as Gerald Sommers. Furthermore his charming childhood playmate, Beryl Blake, did not recognize the real Jerry and was interested in the masquerader. There is plenty of action and adventure before Jerry comes into his own again." Book rev. digest

Silver star. Dodd 1931 306p o.p. 1941

In the wake of a new mining town sprang up a crop of reckless disreputable men. Old Steve Docy, a settler and rancher had just been elected sheriff by a close majority over Vargas, the gang leader and he meant to drive his element out of the town. He was found shot and his son a gambler and pal of Vargas declared he had the first call to square the deal. . . The methods of tracking down his enemies, caused terror in the hearts of his friends, but after much excitement and gun play, in which Steve is nearly killed, the men are routed." Cleveland

"Modern Iceland is the scene of a story that in parts is as stark and primitive as the old sagas. Haldor was a northerner and the southerners among whom he lived were reluctant to accept him, in spite of his bravery and good seamanship, until outside recognition made him a hero. The woman who had been his mistress, discarded when he married, was implacable in her revenge; through her enmity he was kept in poverty and her hatred followed him to death. At the end he knew that life had not been too hard; he had suffered from his own misdeeds but he had carried always the memory and inspiration of an early love." Bkl.

"The plan of the 'Slick Series,' which is Haliburton's most characteristic work, is as follows: An English traveller, overtaken by an itinerant clockmaker, accompanies him to the coasts of Fundy; to the South Shore; to Connecticut, and to England; and, later, secures from him the journals of his cruises off the bights of Nova Scotia. 'The Old Judge' . . . is similarly constructed. In each case the journey is merely a means of introducing the observations of the Squire, the Peddler, and the Justice, on the men and manners of their time." The author

 Union square is the scene, and the charac-

 live. As in 'Grand hotel' the various groups are linked by their location, there is no character development and little plot, but rather a faithfully realistic section of life

 prose, that will offend some readers by its coarseness." Bkl

"A droll story of picaresque adventure among the Tennessee fisher folk living on flatboats on the Mississippi—shiftless whites with a casual moral code and a happy acceptance of life. Ernie's wife Pearl, resentful of Ernie's failure to resist his attacks of wanderlust, departed for New Orleans, and her father-in-law, with his dog Lena and the combination of musical instruments known as his 'contraption,' went down the river to bring her back." Knopf 1921 2v in 1 $2.50

Also available from Modern lib. at 95c
"A realistic novel of rude peasant life in an out-of-the-way corner of Norway. It has vivid, well-differentiated characters and is of interest as a record of the development of a self-conscious community from a widely separated collection of isolated farms. It makes its deepest human appeal, however, as a story of man making a place for himself under primitive conditions and subject to the ordering of nature, rather than to the feverish demands of civilization; in so far as Isak and Inger, their children and neighbors, live close to the soil. There is wholesome growth and simple happiness. The story is told in a slow, simple style suited to its material." Cleveland

"Tale of a small group of people in a town on the Norwegian coast. Abel Brodersen son of the lighthouse keeper, is the central figure. After two voyages he returns to his native town, there to pursue his philosophical questioning of life. For a year he is captain of the milk boat which plies up and down the coast, but much of the time he exists in a day-to-day fashion, giving away what little money he has and living on the leavings. His probing into the meaning of life seems to begin and end in the idea that contentment is found within the individual." Book rev. digest

Road leads on; tr. from the Norwegian by Eugene Gay-Tiff. Coward-McCann 1934 536p $3

"This brings to a close the trilogy in which August, the unscrupulous braggart, is the chief character. 'Vagabonds' and 'August' are the earlier books." Cleveland

"The scene is again Segelfoss, now considerably altered, with factories, banks, automobiles, and a cinema. The book ends on a tragic note, when August meets with an appalling death." Bkl.

General John Regan, by G. A. Birmingham (pseud.), Doran 1913 319p o.p. 1941

"Ballymoy, in the west of Ireland, had an American visitor who regretted the slumbering character of the town. But when he asked to see the birthplace of General John Regan he woke up more activity than the place had ever known before. At once he was shown ancestral home and relatives of his hero and was told of a memorial soon to be erected and to be unveiled by the Lord Lieutenant. True, none of the citizens had ever heard of the General but their ignorance was silenced by the tactful and genial Dr. O'Grady, akin in type to the well-known 'J. J.' It is then the imaginative doctor's task to find a statue and arrange a proper celebration, yet at no expense to the Ballymoy citizens. The way in which he accomplishes that task gives the zest to the comedy." Book rev. digest

Lalage's lovers, by G. A. Birmingham (pseud.), Doran 1911 276p o.p. 1941

"A merry tale in which the heroine is a hoydenish Irish girl, the daughter of an easy going Canon, in whom are combined athletic and bookish qualities without the usual trace of Irish humor. At Trinity college, Dublin, she is seized with the zeal of the reformer and daringly employs her pen against certain elections and the choice of bishops." Book rev. digest

How the major, willy nilly, was directed by the Reverend J. J. Meldon in retrieving the lost valuables will afford a good laugh for those who like the ridiculous." N.Y. libraries

Major's niece, by G. A. Birmingham (pseud.), Doran 1911 302p o.p. 1941

"How a certain middle-aged bachelor was bidden by his Australian sister to receive her daughter in his home in Ireland, how he prepared to entertain a beautiful young woman, and how there came to him a ten-year-old child with a dirty face and ready for all the wild scrapes which Ireland could provide, are the things which Mr Birmingham has to tell us." "The story of Darby, the child of a mountaineer so shiftless that the neighbors agreed 'if there was one man they wouldn't mind to lose, he was it.' A brief, ecstatic love affair with an outsider left the girl facing, helplessly, the prospect of an illegitimate child, and even more ostracism. In desperation she took the only refuge offered and became one of the polygamous moonshiner's women. It was food and shelter for her boy, until mother love, foreseeing his future, forced her to the harder course of returning to her home. Sensitively told, with tender feeling for an ignorant girl whose groping aspiration found solace only in the beauty of nature." Bkl.

"A drama of passion and nemesis, enacted amidst the wild and solemn scenery of an imaginary heath, and animated profoundly by the author's philosophy of revolt. . . Fatal misunderstandings between dear relatives, and the subtle and imperceptible yielding to temptation which leads to crime and death, are the determining motives. Clym Yeobright and his mother and the exotic Eustacia Vye are among his finest impersonations of human longing and disillusionment, anguish, and endurance." Baker's Best

"The tragic history of a woman betrayed. . . Tess, the author contends, is sinned against, but not a sinner; her tragedy is the work of tyrannical circumstances and of the evil deeds of others in the past and the present, and more particularly of two men's baseness, the seducer, and the well-meaning intellectual who married her. . . The pastoral surroundings, the varying aspects of field, river, sky, serve to deepen the pathos of stage in the heroine's calamities, or to add beauty and dignity to her tragic personality." First published 1927 by Doubleday
"Because of the prominence of the principals in Long Island society, the Bellamy trial is the sensation of the hour. Stephen Bellamy and Susan Ives (Mrs Patrick Ives) are accused of the murder of Stephen's wife. It is the State's contention that Patrick Ives and Madeleine Bellamy were caught in a clandestine affair and that the guilty woman was killed by the accused from motives of jealousy and revenge. Incriminating circumstances are brought out at the trial, but the defendants are their own best witnesses and public sympathy is for them. The trial over, there is still a surprise left for the

"Gabriel Conroy" first published 1876
"begins with the straits of a party of set-culminates in an earthquake which performs the functions of deus ex machina.

Humorous scenes are interlaced with the murders, lynching, miraculous escapes; and a perplexing tangle of villainy, love and jealousy, intrigue, is unravelled in an astonishing trial scene. Among the characters that bear the stamp of Dickens may be singled out the fascinating desperado, Jack Hamlin, and Colonel Starbottle, a swashbuckler advocate (both well known from other novels), but the most original is Gabriel himself, stupid but self-forget-

 Atlantis; a novel; tr. by Adele and Thomas Seltzer. Huebsch 1912 415p o.p. 1941
 "The German doctor and the Swedish dancer with their love story, formally the connecting-link, fade into insignificance in comparison with the broad imaginative view of our complex modern life, as beheld on the vast liner crossing the Atlantic, or in the furious stress of business and pleasure in the United States, a view that is essentially critical and philosophical." Baker's Best
- Fool in Christ; Emmanuel Quint, tr. by Thomas Seltzer; preface by Ernest Boyd. Viking 1911 474p o.p. 1941
 "It outwardly professes to give us, from the sympathetically sophisticated point of view of our own informed modernity, the story of a present-day German peasant's religious monomania and propagandist career. Yet in reality it places before us, in the simple terms of a thoroughly individualized contemporary life, a moving restatement of the lost meaning of that Christian mystery, the mystic mingling of the human and the divine." Pittsburgh
- Island of the great mother; or, The miracle of Ile des dames; a story from the Utopian archipelago; tr. by Willa and Edwin Muir. Viking 1925 328p o.p. 1941
 "A boatload of shipwrecked women and one boy arrive safely on an island in the Utopian archipelago. Immediately upon landing one of the ladies mounts a rock and announces to her still slightly hysterical companions that they must at once elect a president and organize a state. The organization proceeds forthwith, and the life of the community begins in orderly fashion. There is no male in the party save the twelve-year-old Phaon. A year later the population of the state is suddenly and no doubt miraculously increased. It continues to rise. The fate of the Utopian community and the diligent love affairs of Phaon form the substance of this ironic tale." Book rev. digest

Last port of call; a novel; tr. from the German by Barrows Mussey. Stackpole sons 1938 340p op 1941

"A well-written, leisurely story of a sailing vessel's last voyage. Jorg Borckes, the sole passenger, is an analytically inclined intellectual who has left his wife and children, hoping that the long voyage will restore his equilibrium; he records the events of the trip with his reactions to them, indulges in reminiscences, and observes the captain and his crew, understanding Captain Anderson's tragic plight as master of an outmoded ship. Teutonic in attitude; limited in appeal." Bkl.

"Virginia in the 1790-1800 period. A novel reflecting largely the political developments of the time following the American War of Independence. Allusions to leading men like Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Alexander Hamilton, and John Adams are frequent, but the story on the historical side is one of general atmosphere rather than of particular events or persons. Covers Washington's Second Presidency (the Proclamation for Neutrality, etc.), and ends after his death, with the announcement of Jefferson's election as President." Nield

Tampico, a novel. Knopf 1926 328p $2.50

A "novel of American commercial imperialism. In 'Tampico' the author has set down a full-length portrait of the unscrupulous American who goes into a foreign land to exploit its resources for his own gain. This American is primitive in his instincts and high-handed in his methods. He abides by no law save that of tooth and claw. True, there is a tense story of passion here, somewhat after the order of those in 'The Three Black Pennys' and in 'Cytherea.' But it is a tangled web, now passion, now greed. Altogether a story of frustration, physical and mental; and of battle, the battle of a strong man for power and mastery over women, over men, over himself." N.Y. World

* Forest lovers; a romance Macmillan 1898 384p o.p. 1941

"Romance, adventure, enchantment, and love are the dominant elements of this novel. Set in mediaeval France, it concerns the marriage and subsequent love of Prosper le Gai and Isoult la Desirée, and carries them through many fantastic and exciting adventures in the mysterious forest of Morgraunt. It is decidedly light reading, but there is a guileless quality in the writing, somewhat similar stylistically to the true mediaeval romances, which supplies color and an unusual relish for the romantic reader interested in the age of chivalry." * Life and death of Richard Yea-and-Nay.

"An imaginative and dramatic reading of the character and life-history of Richard Coeur-de-Lion, poetical rather than actual style and method. Richard's passionate, reckless, and domineering personality is painted in hot colours; and the lady of his knightly passion is a perfect creature of romance, beside whom Berengaria seems quite a secondary figure. Departing from strict accuracy in the record of events, it is a brilliant, perhaps too brilliant, reconstruction of the manners and emotions, the poetry and pageantry of the age of tournaments and crusades." "This is the story of Patricio, a young Bolivian Indian, who like Kipling's Kim, becomes the disciple of a strange, mystical priest of his own people. The priest, in pursuit of his own designs, sends the boy to live among the whites, to learn their ways. There Patricio finds love, friendships, favor, and the promise to great rewards, but even as he is hesitating before accepting, his master returns and bids him go back to his own people." "Several people at a dinner party are discussing a novel, the theme of which is that it is better to let sleeping dogs lie, for if you inquire too deeply in the truth of a situation someone is bound to be hurt. In the midst of the conversation something comes up which needs explaining. The author, then works out at length all the ghastly truths which would have come to light had the situation been explained. But just in time a gay tune comes over the radio, the guests start to dance, and the dangerous corner is passed. The novel is based on Mr Priestley's play of the same name." Book rev. digest

"Benedict Arnold is shown as a brilliant man of action, goaded by a tireless ambition for fame. He was wounded at Saratoga and led the expedition against Quebec; he was adored by his men whom he clothed from personal funds. On the other hand he was extravagant and had questionable commercial dealings. With fortunes depleted and pride thwarted, Arnold turned to the English for the renown that he wanted, believing, however, that he acted in the interest of the United States. . . Arnold's contradictory character is well explained. Except for the rather dull prolog, the book is generally accurate and vivid." Bkl.

"A prose-poem of the sea, representing the eternal conflict of the elemental powers of nature against the will of man. Jersey and the neighbouring seas are the theatre of the struggle, and the life of the mariner, the flora and fauna of the ocean and its isles, the infinite aspects of the sea in storm and calm, are depicted with a characteristic mixture of minute realism and rhapsodical eloquence. The interest is focussed on Gilliatt's superhuman combat with the waves, out of which he issues triumphant, only to be worsted in the hour of victory by a woman's caprice." Baker's Best

Candle indoors. Coward-McCann 1936
300p o.p 1941

"The story of a father's attempts to raise his three motherless children. The father was not the perfect father, either as a man or as a parent, and the trials were many and bitter, but in the end there was some kind of success." Book rev. digest

Experiment, four short novels. Coward-McCann 1940 309p $2.50 (W)

Contents: With the one coin for fee; Food for thought; Snow in summer; Experiment

"With the one coin for fee" was first published in Good Housekeeping under the title "Last September"; "Food for thought" in Redbook magazine; "Snow in summer" in Story magazine; and "Experiment" in Pictorial review under the title "Life experiments"

* Frost flower. Coward-McCann 1939 313p $2.50 (W)

The story of happily married Phyllis Collings whose life is complicated by her family and by the vindictive widow of Andy Fulton, her former lover Serialized in "McCall's magazine" with title "Love without laughter"

* Hardy perennial. Coward-McCann 1933 301p $2.50

"The story opens with Horace's return from a successful lecture tour abroad. Cornelia and her son David are meeting his boat. Immediately the nature of the situation reveals itself and Cornelia appears in her self-appointed role as buffer between Horace's ego and the world. In the months that follow the situation comes to a crisis, but Cornelia's love—a hardy perennial—survives." Wis. bul.

* Heat lightning. Coward-McCann 1932 328p o.p 1941

"The smothering heat of a midwestern summer is an integral part of this story, creating a tension that heightens the drama, while the heat lightning on the horizon is both a threat and a promise of relief. Seeking privacy in which to face a crisis of her married life, Amy Westover returns to her parents' home and is at once caught in the strain of crucial days in the life of the clan. Money troubles, dishonesty, illicit love, the family skeleton—all appear in one week, and as she looks on and listens to her wise old grandmother, Amy gains a new vision of her own life." Bkl.

Labyrinth Macmillan 1923 343p o.p. 1941

"Catherine Hammond is the intellectual type of woman, caught in the labyrinth of after war conditions. Her husband, Charles Hammond, professor in a New York city college, is happy in their home and their three fascinating children, and so is Catherine. During the war, while Charles was in France, Catherine had done some good research work, and now when she is feeling the lack of mental stimulus comes a chance to reenter the work. . . While she is on an investigation trip in Ohio, she is recalled by a serious accident to ten-year-old Spencer. . . When Spencer recovers Catherine's thoughts once more turn to the research bureau. A move to a smaller college just at this time does not straighten matters; the labyrinth only grows more confusing." Book rev. digest

Morning shows the day Coward-McCann 1934 421p $2.50

"The characters are a group of small-town high school students—the editors of the school annual—and the author, following them through the next thirty years, shows that their futures were forecast by their beginnings and determined by both personality and surroundings." Bkl.

Through the house door. Coward-McCann 1940 264p $2.50 (W)

The theme of this novel is the difficult situation confronting a family when the breadwinner loses his capacity for work and the task falls upon his wife

Hull, Morris

Cannery Anne Houghton 1936 267p $2

"Young Anne had been a cannery girl for years when she met Scotty in the plant not far from San Francisco. Together they went thru the canning season, before they decided to join forces for life. As the story closes they are setting out for the coast in their rattletrap of a Ford, eagerly planning the day when they will have a cannery of their own." Book rev. digest

Hull, Richard, pseud. See Sampson, Richard Henry

Hulme, Kathryn Cavarly, 1900-

We lived as children. Knopf 1938 325p $2.50 (W)

A portrait of an American family in which the mother and father are separated. The story is told by one of the children and the background is San Francisco from the days of the earthquake up to the war

Human being Morley, C.

Hummel, George Frederick, 1882-

Heritage Stokes 1935 674p $2.50

"A long novel, of interest chiefly as the story of a community. A village on Long Island, very Puritan in its heritage, to which comes a family of German immigrants, is the scene. Altho it covers a long span of time from about 1840 to 1890, there is no attempt to reproduce the atmosphere of the period. A few incidents might be considered objectionable." Wis. bul.

Followed by "Tradition"

Tradition. Coward-McCann 1936 430p $2.50

"A long chronicle novel of the lives of a group of variously related people living in the little town of Norwold at the eastern end of Long Island. The time covered is from 1914 to 1935." Book rev. digest

 Contents: Humoresque; Oats for the woman; Petal on the current; White goods; "Heads"; Boob spelled backward; Even as you and I; Wrong pew

Imitation of life; a novel. Harper 1933 352p $2.50

"At nineteen Bea Pullman was left a widow, with a helpless father and a newborn child to care for. Beginning by carrying on the sale of maple syrup which had been her husband's side line, Bea builds up a vast restaurant and candy business. As her main help she has a negress a widow also with one child, whose waffles and coffee are widely advertised by pictures of her beaming countenance. The story ends when Bea is forty and ready to sell out and enjoy life, only to find that life has passed her by." Book rev. digest

Lummox. Harper 1923 329p $2.50

"Bertha, huge of body and white of skin, half Swede, half Slav, was born somewhere on the waterfront of New York. . . Her life was spent in hard labor, sometimes as domestic servant, sometimes as day worker.

"Once a young poet . . . sensed the drama of the unconscious in this uncouth body and the result was a single book of inspired verse for an otherwise mediocre talent and for Bertha a son in the flesh. More silent now than ever and more lonely—her baby signed away to rich foster-parents—Bertha stumbled thru life and stumbled at last, when middle age had made her less sought after as a worker, upon a family of neglected, motherless children." Book rev. digest

President is born. Harper 1928 484p o.p. 1941

"Destined to become a President of these United States, David Schuyler was born on an Illinois farm twenty years after his older brothers and sisters. His boyhood and adolescence among these diverse adult Schuylers and the formation of his sturdy character are built up in great detail to which verisimilitude is given by copious footnotes supposedly taken from the diary of his sister Bek, who is thruout her life, David's loyal partisan and friend. The diary goes beyond the immediate years of the story to David's second term in the presidency. These glimpses of the future reveal the promise of his youth fulfilled." Book rev. digest

Hurston, Zora Neale

Jonah's gourd vine; with an introd by Fanny Hurst Lippincott 1934 316p $2

"Story of Negro life in the South, rich in dialect and folklore. The hero is a big lovable yellow Negro preacher, with a great talent for emotionalism and a powerful fascination for women." Book rev. digest

Moses, man of the mountain. Lippincott 1939 351p $3

"A fictionized biography of Moses as a religious leader and a great voodoo man, told in Negro vernacular with humor and a Negro folklore quality that is warm and human." Bkl.

Their eyes were watching God, a novel. Lippincott 1937 286p $2

"Janie, a handsome, partly white Negro girl, sought through two marriages to find the love she dreamed of. When she was forty and a widow with property, the gay young gambler, Tea Cake, married her and brought her the happiness she had almost missed. Their brief life together, which closed tragically, gave her beautiful and lasting memories. The life of a Negro village and of workers in the Everglades are a natural part of the warm human story; the Negro speech is easy to read." Bkl.

Hutchinson, Arthur Stuart-Menteth, 1880-
He looked for a city. Duell 1941 408p $2.75

"An old-fashioned English novel, written with some sentimentality and plentiful use of British slang. The central figure is a gentle, idealistic clergyman, whose four children grew up during his 30 years in a country parish. The first World war brought shattering blows and the children did not meet life as their father did; in spite of disillusionment his faith and hope remained." Bkl.

If winter comes. Little 1921 415p $2.50
"Misunderstanding and disappointments beset the hero who, being gifted with unusual insight into other people's motives, condones and endures until he is overwhelmed as by a winter's storm." Pittsburgh

Appeared serially in "Everybody's magazine"

One increasing purpose. Little 1925 448p $2.50

"Lighthearted, winning Sim Paris, the youngest of three brothers and a soldier by profession, emerges unscathed from grilling experiences in the war. Convinced that there is a reason for his immunity, he resigns from the army and seeks rural solitude to find himself and work out the purpose for which his life has been spared. The events leading up to his discovery of his mission, and the way he fulfills it, combine to make a characteristic Hutchinson story, inspirational, deeply sincere but exasperating in style and often sentimental." Cleveland

Hutchinson, Mrs Dorothy Dwight (Power)

y Nathalie enters advertising; with illus. by F. W. Orr. Little 1939 276p $2

"Vocational story for older girls. It describes the career of a young girl from the country who comes to New York determined to have a career in advertising. Sequel to "Nathalie enters advertising"
"This book tells the story of an intelligent young girl's second year in a New York advertising office. . . Her attitude toward criticism, obstacles, and a puzzling boy friend is refreshingly wholesome and the career angle is sketched in briefly and interestingly. The author's experience as an advertising writer shows in her clear-cut style." Library journal

Answering glory Farrar 1932 303p o.p. 1941

"This is the story of Miss Thompson, who after forty years spent as a missionary and the only white woman on an island off the African coast is carried unwillingly back to England. There she dies but her example sends another out to take her place." Book rev. digest

* Fire and the wood; a love story. Farrar 1940 440p $2.50 (W)

"Germany and England form the setting of this [tragic] story of a young German scientist who believes that he has discovered a cure for Tuberculosis." Hunting

An abridged version was published in the "Redbook"

Shining scabbard. Farrar 1936 483p o.p. 1941

"During the Franco-Prussian war a French officer, Colonel Séverin, had been courtmartialled for cowardice. Since that time the family had been intent upon having the stain removed from the family name. One son, Pierre, was on colonial service in Africa; except for him all the members of the family were gathered together in a strange menage at Baulon, a small town between Paris and the Rhine. Circumstances made it imperative that Pierre send his Eurasian wife and two children home to Baulon, thus complicating an already over-stocked household. The story, which is a working out of the strange destinies of the Severins, ends in 1914." Book rev. digest

Testament, a novel. Farrar 1938 696p $3 (W)

"The story of Count Anton Scheffler, a Russian, during the first World war and after it. Scheffler, gentle, kindly, and humane, was badly wounded and captured by the Austrians early in the war. In prison he met Captain Otravskov and the two immediately became friends. It is Otravskov who is the narrator, and his story is of both their lives." Book rev. digest

Huxley, Aldous Leonard, 1894-

After many a summer dies the swan Harper 1939 356p $2.50

Also available from Sun dial at $1
The story of a multimillionaire who is obsessed by the desire to live indefinitely. To his huge castle in California he brings everything which will give him feelings of power. The plot is concerned with the discovery of a remedy for old age in the note-book of an eighteenth-century English Earl and the discovery of the Earl himself in the cellars of an English house. Published serially in "Harper's magazine"

Brave new world; a novel. Harper 1932 311p $2.50

"A telling satire treating of a future mechanistic universe destined to rob the world of all beauty." Pratt quarterly

Crome yellow. Harper 1922 307p $2.50

A "house-party, talking philandering, and busied in the pretentious avocations of the moneyed intellectual. . . All is observed from the point of view of a raw youth in love with a more experienced girl. There is a painter among the crowd who has done with cubism, an amateur archaeologist, a writer of books with 'uplift,' a clergyman ingenuitating Armageddon. The satire of these current types looks more flippant than it really is." Baker's Best

Huxley, Aldous L.—Continued

Eyeless in Gaza. Harper 1936 473p $2.50

"Thru a series of flash backs in time and place, interspersed with chapters on the present, the writer tells the story of the English boy Anthony Beavis from the death of his mother in 1902, to his early forties in 1934. It is the study of an intellectual youth growing to manhood in a period of war and economic turmoil. He is beset by doubts and vacillations in his attempt to find an acceptable way of living until he meets an indomitable Scotch doctor in Mexico. Thereafter he fashions his life according to the doctor's pattern and finds a new freedom." Book rev. digest

* Point counter point. Harper 1928 432p $2.50

"Disgust at the great spectacle humanity makes of itself and Rabelaisian laughter over the futility of life are foremost in this long satirical novel. Sections of an intelligent, complicated society of sensualists, cynics, radicals, romanticists, scientists, novelists, and many others are presented, one against the other—point counter point. All the various forms of rottenness, especially sexual, are pilloried and set over against human soundness." Bkl.

Huxley, Mrs Elspeth Joscelin (Grant) 1907-African poison murders. Harper 1939 279p $2

Published in England under title: Death of an Aryan

"Authentic South African background . . . A Mr. Munson, who farms when he isn't being a Nazi Bund leader, dies of some obscure poison, and plenty of horror follows. The international complications are too faint to be annoying and the mysterious atmosphere is thick enough to cut with a knife. Beautifully written." New Yorker

Detective: Superintendent Vachell

Murder at government house. See note under Huxley. Murder on safari

Murder on safari. Harper 1938 289p $2

"Vachell, a member of the C.I.D., is summoned by the white hunter in charge of a luxurious big game safari to investigate the loss of Lada Baradale's jewels—but, before the investigation is barely under way, she is found shot. Vachell found a number of prime suspects, and around this set-up is written this original and interesting mystery." Hunting

Mrs E. J. G. Huxley's "Murder at government house" (Harper 1937 282p $2) laid in a West African British colony is the story of a murder mystery solved by Vachell of the C.I.D.

"Character sketches of a group of English commuters who daily travel together in the same railway compartment to their work in the city. Outwardly each of these leads a commonplace life of an even tenor, but each is shown to be at heart a lonely, ill-adjusted individual. A slender narrative thread connects the lives of the oddly assorted company." Wis. bul.

Little golden calf; authorized tr. from the Russian by Charles Malamuth; with an introduction by Anatol Lunacharsky. Farrar 1932 402p $1.50

"A scalawag, living under the Soviet regime, attracts three satellites to himself and they roam about the country playing practical tricks emanating from the brain of the 'great schemer.' A picaresque extravaganza, satiric, comic, and with significant sidelights on life in Russia today." N.Y. libraries

My sister's story, by Michael Ossorgin [pseud.]. Dial press 1931 235p o.p. 1941

"A quiet undramatic novel, noteworthy for its excellent character sketch of a Russian woman and the picture it gives of life in pre-revolutionary Russia. The author reviews the life of his beloved sister, an intelligent cultured woman, whose life was a tragedy of opportunities to happiness missed. Makes fascinating reading despite the lack of plot." Wis. bul.

Quiet street, by Michael Ossorgin [pseud.]. Dial press 1930 344p o.p. 1941

Translated by Nadja Helstein
"In this distinguished novel by a Russian emigré a fine sense of justice and humanity predominates. In a quiet street in Moscow there lived a lovable old professor, an ornithologist, with his granddaughter Tanyusha, surrounded by a group of friends. The story of the changes wrought by the war and the revolution in their cultured, sheltered lives is told with detachment and a deep understanding that puts the war in its proper perspective. The character drawing, especially of the heroine, Tanyusha, and the two students, Vassya and Stolinov, is admirable." Ekl.

Irwin, Margaret E. F.

The bride; the story of Louise and Montrose. Harcourt 1939 401p $2.50

"This novel continues and perhaps completes the author's series of historical romances centering around the family of Charles I and the English civil wars. It ties up most closely with 'The proud servant' for it is a story of Montrose, hero of that novel, and of his love for Louise, sister of Prince Rupert, who was the central figure in 'The stranger prince.' Louise is a fine, spirited heroine for a novel of any time or period and those who have not read the previous books will be tempted to go back to them on finishing this one." Wis. bul.

Proud servant; the story of Montrose. Harcourt 1934 441p front o.p. 1941

"An historical novel based upon the life of James Graham, first marquis of Montrose, who promised Charles I to 'raise Scotland for the King,' and in order to do that rode thru hostile armies and country, and in one year made himself master of Scotland. Disaster came as quickly as success, but the 'proud servant' faced both with equanimity." Book rev. digest

Followed by "The bride"

Royal flush; the story of Minette. Harcourt 1932 405p front $2.50

"The fortunes of the family of Charles I, after the king's execution by Cromwell, are the subject of this historical novel.

Irwin, Margaret E. F.—Continued

The central figure is Minette, youngest sister of Charles II, who, by her marriage, united the courts of England and France. In spite of occasional stretches of dull reading, the book is unusually successful; it is historically truthful and vivid, and it tells a fascinating story." Ekl.

Stranger prince; the story of Rupert of the Rhine. Harcourt 1937 527p op 1941

"Historical novel based upon the life of Prince Rupert, son of Elizabeth of Bohemia, who was called the Winter Queen. It begins with the return of the Prince to The Hague after his three years' captivity following the Battle of Vlotho. In a long backward glance the story of his youth is outlined. There follows an account of his part in the English Civil war, and the story ends with Prince Rupert once more at The Hague after the triumph of the Roundhead cause in England." Book rev. digest

Isaacs, Jorge, 1837-1895

Maria; a South American romance; the tr. by Rollo Ogden, an introduction by T. A. Janvier. Harper 302p o.p. 1941 First published 1870

"A simple but poetic story of romantic love, set amid the author's native scenery. The beauty of its description, and the insight shown into South American character won it great popularity." Baker's Best

Thistles of the Baragan; tr. from the French by Jacques Le Clercq. Vanguard 1930 184p op 1941

"The Baragan is a great tract of barren land in Rumania that bears nothing but thistles. Every year by certain seasonal winds, all the heads are broken off and blown rolling hundreds of miles across country. Boys, exhilarated by the rushing wind, often choose one thistle-head and race it across the plain. The story is of the simplest. The hero is a boy in a community that suffers hideous privations. He and his father make an attempt to better things at least by undertaking the hard journey to find a market for the fish that is rotting uneaten. He runs away, follows the thistles, and is taken in by strangers in a community as poor as that of his parents. Sparks of discontent fly about the country and flare up in a peasants' revolt, which is stamped out with great brutality. The boy must set out, spurred by the thistles, across the plains again." N. "Traces the rise and fall of a great American fortune. Bert Inness, who began life as a blacksmith's son, rose to power and wealth when he became an automobile manufacturer, but lost his wealth during the depression. The four women who most influenced Bert's life were his mother, old Maggie, who clung to her farm and her independence even in the days of her son's affluence; Estelle, his pretty, ambitious wife; Blanche, his daughter, pampered product of wealth and postwar frivolity; and Nancy, his granddaughter, who bravely and resolutely turned to her farmer lover in the days of the depression." Book rev. digest

"From the drab poverty of London's East End, and his humble tailor shop, Meyer Pardo rose to wealth and big business. His wife, who wanted only a normal family life, unhampered by great possessions, watched in growing unhappiness and loneliness as Meyer's obsession for money alienated him from his home, when he became a dupe of financiers and went to prison, she found satisfaction in being self-supporting." Founder of the house. Macmillan 1936 394p $2.50

"The art dealer who established his firm in Paris in Napoleonic days handed down his pride in his Jewish blood, and his business integrity. The house flourished in Paris and Vienna, until its finances were drained by the extortions of worthless relatives, and the young owner migrated to England. His later fortune were related in four generations." Bkl.

Four generations. Macmillan 1934 415p $2.50

Sequel to "Founder of the house"

"Chronicle of four generations of an Anglo-Jewish family of art dealers. Old Emmanuel, the founder, is dead but reverently remembered. Max, his son, now heads the firm, helped by his sons. The interest centers on Max's oldest son, young Emmanuel, who breaks away from the family and goes to live in Italy with the one woman who can bring him complete happiness, but loyalty to his father and to the long established Gollantz antique business called him back to try again to adapt himself to English ways." Book rev. digest

Honour come back—. Macmillan 1935 431p $2.50

"A heroic and successful struggle against fear is the theme of [this] novel. Michael Benham is not a coward where his personal well-being is concerned. But from infancy he had been one of those children who could not bear the sight of pain. . . . Michael is a farmer by inclination and aptitude. He is forced to follow the military tradition of his family and the result is near-tragedy." Christian science monitor

The lenient God. Macmillan 1938 328p o.p. 1941

"Many trying things happen before the happy solutions are found—for Bill Warren, who wins a scholarship but becomes a London bus driver and almost married the wrong girl, for his would-be snobbish sister Elsie and her queer little husband Johnny, for Elspeth, in love with and loved by Bill, but married to a psychopath. Readable light fiction with a plot which depends largely on coincidence, but which has some amusing characterizations. Frank in places, but discreetly handled." Bkl.

"Gypsy blood mingling with English blood in the Yorkshire country, the contrast between vagabond life and the merits of law and order are interwoven in the theme of this romance. The most dominant and interesting of the characters are the two gypsy women, Jael and her daughter Paris. It is Paris who, tho she has had a carefree gypsy childhood, also loves the countryside and the soil. Following the death, in the war, of her father and oldest brother, and the crippling of her second brother, she takes over management of her father's farm, and, in spite of severe difficulties, struggles and disappointments, wins thru." Book rev. digest

They left the land. Macmillan 1940 424p $2.50

A story of Yorkshire. "The problem of an heir for two brothers, wealthy middle-aged bachelor-farmers, prompted one of them to marry a young woman of more genteel, but less sturdy stock. The novel is concerned mainly with the development of character in three generations of offspring and in the strong ties of the land which are temporarily weakened. A substantial, convincing family chronicle." Bkl.

This porcelain clay. Macmillan 1939 389p $2.50 (W)

A psychological study of a marriage and the effect that the realization of his share in the responsibility for its failure has upon Louis Silver, one of the principals of the story

Time piece. Macmillan 1937 352p $2.50

"The picture of a Yorkshire squire and his family beginning about 1866 and continuing to the post-War period. The central figure is Claudia Marsden, the squire's daughter. . . . Married at a very early age to a handsome rake, she became a favorite with her Jewish parents-in-law, and when her husband was killed, she became an important member of the family wine firm. She married a second time and developed an interest in her second husband's growing manufacturing business. The love of her life was a man she could not marry, and partly because of this she restored the family estate in Yorkshire, and there lived out her life in the country they both loved." Book rev. digest

N. E. Jacob's "Fade out" (Macmillan 1937 352p o.p. 1941) contains some of the characters who appeared in "Time piece." It is "an unlikely story concerning a conventional English playwright, a comedian with a heart of gold, and the latter's beautiful actress sister." New Yorker

* Ambassadors. Harper 1903 431p $2.50

"Regarded by James as his best-constructed novel: a finished example of his latest artistic method. Strether, the chief ambassador, is sent to England by the wealthy queen of a philistine town in New England to rescue her son. But the rescuer's eyes are gradually opened to the beauty of a world that had made the fugitive into one of James's perfect men, and he himself is the one to entreat Chad to stay. 'Live all you can; it's a mistake not to,' is the philosophy ultimately announced. The whole history of the case, subtle and complicated . . . is set forth in the mirror of Strether's consciousness." Baker's Best

* American. Houghton 473p $2.50

First published 1877

"A self-made American goes to Europe to enjoy his 'pile,' and becomes engaged to a French widow of noble family. The match is a good one for both parties, but at length the powers that rule this exclusive social world deliver their verdict: the engagement must be annulled. The American's pluck and good nature are happily contrasted with the colossal pride and essential meanness of the old noblesse." Baker's Best

Appeared serially in "The Atlantic monthly"

Awkward age; a novel. Harper 1899 456p $2.50

"In such a novel as this James can be seen turning his psychological apparatus in a speculative direction, tracing out a tendency, a phase of social behaviour, to a stage hardly discernible in the world of reality. His 'collection of natural affinities' outrun all their predecessors in the decadent arts of free living and experimenting with good and evil, especially evil. The incidents slight, the action purely intellectual and emotional, the dialogue so nebulous and allusive that a sustained effort is required to follow it." Baker's Best

"Four books of the contemplated ten of a novel of contemporary American life, the gist of the unfinished work, including most of the plot, being given in one hundred pages of notes. The scenes are laid in Newport, and the plot hinges upon a large fortune whose management the heir entrusts to a friend who betrays his trust. The theme is that underlying so much of the novelist's work, the essential fallibility of human nature. Artistically, the book reaches the high water mark of James' genius." Cleveland

Two magics: Turn of the screw, Covering End. Macmillan 393p o.p. 1941
First published 1898

"The Turn of the Screw" employs the ... device of impressions conveyed through a mind into which we are ded; without any romantic nonsense. They are two evil beings, straight from hell, who have secured a grip on the souls of two children, and made them partners in the abominations of their own secret life. 'Covering End' is a little comedy concerned with the doings of a captivating American, who makes a raid on an old country house." Baker's Best

Washington square. Harper 266p $2.50

Wings of a dove. Scribner 1902 2v front o.p. 1941

"Three minds become each in turn the stage on which we are shown what is going on: Kate Croy's, Densher's, and Milly Theale's. Kate and Densher are pledged to each other, and Kate persuades her lover to pay attentions to Milly, so that the pair may subsequently enjoy the fortune which would almost certainly be left to Densher when the dying girl is gone. Milly, 'the Dove,' is one of his most delicate creations—shadowed by Fate, marked down for extinction before her splendid chances of joy can be realized, pathetically sure that the will to live might be re-created if she loved and were loved in return." * Big-enough; illus. by the author. Scribner 1931 314p illus $2.50

"This is the story of a cowboy and a cowhorse—born on the same day—They grew up together to where they was big enough—Big enough for most anything." Author

The book is illustrated by the author with the same type of illustration that we find in "Lone Cowboy" and "Smoky" and told in the same Will James vernacular. The usual cowboy life in the west is pictured forming a background for the life of this boy

y Dark horse. Scribner 1939 306p illus $2.50 (W)

"Story of two thoroughbreds. Colonel is a dark horse in more senses than one. He has a famous sire, but because he is of a different color, his owner sells him to a cowboy who wants to take a present back to the boss's daughter. This thoroughbred of the stables becomes a companion of Pecos, a thoroughbred of the plains." Hunting

y Flint Spears: a cowboy rodeo contestant; illus. with drawings by the author and photographs. Scribner 1938 269p illus $2.50 (W)

Silhouette of Mary Ann, a novel about George Eliot, by J. E. Buckrose pseud., Stokes 1931 307p o.p. 1941

"This fictionalized biography of George Eliot follows closely the facts of her life, drawing freely for its background upon the scenes so vividly described in her novels. It is an interesting story and successful in presenting the atmosphere of the times. One feels, however, that the author is not entirely in sympathy with George Eliot, and has not quite done her justice." Bkl.

Company parade. Knopf 1934 374p $2.50

"According to the author's statement, this is the first of a series of five or six novels to be called 'The mirror of darkness,' which will develop the story of the many and varied characters here introduced. The leading character is Hervey Russell, who is the granddaughter of Mary Hervey, of 'The lovely ship' . . . and who appears also in 'That was yesterday'. . . The scene is post-war London, and the characters reflect the same disillusion and dissatisfaction with the world which was so forcibly set forth in the author's autobiography, 'No time like the present'. . . One scene may be objectionable to some readers." Bkl.

Europe to let; the memoirs of an obscure man Macmillan 1940 282p $2.50

"A story without plot, written from an author's heartsick disillusionment, and tragic and moving in effect. An English journalist, travelling about Europe during the past three years, sees in the lives of people in Vienna, Prague, Budapest, and other places, the fate of Europe—the fanaticism of the Nazis, the patriotism of the Czechs, and everywhere the insecurity and doom of the Jews." The lives of the motley tenants who fill the upper floors of New Moon Yard form the elements of this novel. New Moon Yard, itself, is a picturesque old London house, once a handsome residence, now run down and housing all types of modern society from a night club proprietor to an aging woman anarchist

In the second year. Macmillan 1936 311p $2.50

"England a few years hence, an England under Fascist rule, is the scene of this novel. The story is told by a young intellectual who returns to his native land after several years residence in Norway. He finds a starving population, concentration camps, murdered Jews. Despairing of the future of his country, he returns to Norway." Book rev. digest

Love in winter. Knopf 1935 394p o.p. 1941

"There is little plot in this chronicle of one year of Hervey Russell's life, which is . . . planned to run through several volumes. It follows 'Company parade' . . . and shows Hervey breaking with her weak husband, Penn, and taking her cousin Nicholas as her lover." Bkl.

Lovely ship. Knopf 1927 328p o.p. 1941

"A Yorkshire shipyard in the eighteen fifties furnishes a background for this vigorous novel full of graphic episodes and fine descriptions. Many of the characters might have been drawn from life. It tells the story of Mary Hansyke, who inherits her uncle's shipyard and becomes a successful woman of business. But her other ventures in life bring only disappointment and defeat." Bkl.

"In a small Yorkshire fishing town live the Wikkies—a strange set of people—all (with the exception of Handel Wikker) self-centered, cruel and gross, but with tremendous courage and force of life. The story revolves around Handel who loathed tyranny and oppression, and who beat out his life fighting for justice for the poor of the village. Well written." Hunting

Pitiful wife. Knopf 1924 336p o.p. 1941

"The manor house of Trudesthorp on the Yorkshire moors is the scene of this rather violent story. Jael, the lovely and sensitive young daughter of the house, married Richmond Drew whose grandfather had carved the panels of the noble hall. . . The marriage of Jael and Richmond was at first an ecstasy of soul and body, but their love was always tempestuous. For no apparent reason except spent nerves after the war, Richmond proved unfaithful to his wife, tho still loving her Jael, in bitterness of soul, was compelled to make her way, with her husband, out of the enchantment of romance to that compromise with the cruelty of life which can only come through pity." Book rev. digest

Richer dust. Knopf 1931 459p o.p. 1941

"The last volume in the trilogy, the earlier volumes of which were 'The lovely ship' and 'The voyage home.' This story shows Mary Hervey in her old age, still grimly ruling her board of directors and her family. She plans that her grandson Nicholas shall carry on the ship building business and Nick's development, marriage, and the effect of the war upon his life are the chief concern of the book. The trilogy is keen in its character analysis and presents a memorable picture of pre-war England." Cleveland

That was yesterday. Knopf 1932 439p o.p. 1941

"Hervey Russell is the granddaughter of Mary Hervey, but aside from that relationship their stories are quite independent and this novel is in no sense a sequel to the trilogy which was completed by 'A richer dust'. . . It is a carefully written, penetrating, and very human story of the first years of marriage. Hervey and Penn are very young, both in years and in character; Hervey talented, but undisciplined and bewildered, Penn egotistic, weak, and selfish. Poverty of the grimmest kind wore them out and completed the estrangement that with their temperaments was inevitable." Bkl.

* Long journey; tr. by A. G. Chater. Knopf 1923-24 3v o.p. 1941

Contents: v 1 Fire and ice; v2 The Cimbrians, v3 Christopher Columbus

The first volume is "a translation of the first two parts of the Danish novelist's historical cycle, 'The long journey.' The aim of the entire cycle is to retrace the long journey traveled by mankind from primeval chaos to modern civilization. The present volume tells how the use of fire first became known and gave rise to the beginnings of religious worship and how the ice-age became a civilizing force." Book rev. digest

In "The Cimbrians," the author "carried his epic story of man another stage forward on the long journey which culminates in the discovery of the New World. Norna Gest, the fabulous figure of Norse legend . . . watches with his own eyes the forced migration of the Cimbrians from Jutland . . . their journey toward the South, and their final destruction by the Romans." Book rev. digest

In the final volume "Christopher Columbus" the author "conceives of Columbus as a Northerner, descendant of one of the migratory bands that invaded Italy. The story of the voyage is vividly told, but the whole interpretation is symbolic and will appeal only to readers of literary taste." Wis. bul.

"The background of this historical novel is the story of the annexation of Upper Burma by the British. Fanny, a Burmese girl educated in a Brighton boarding school becomes a maid of honor at the court in Mandalay. At the same time her English school-girl friend, Agatha, marries a young missionary to Burma. A vivid contrast in the characters of the two girls and their reactions to the romantic but pasteboard red-and gold Burmese life, is drawn against the rule of King Thibaw. Fanny's spurned love for the French engineer, Bonvoisin, plays an important part." Book rev. digest

 "Julian Howard's father was a schoolteacher and Julian's boyhood had been one long series of hegiras. When Mr Howard bought a 1000 acre farm in Nebraska, Julian hoped their wandering days were over. Little by little Julian made friends in the new country and learned the elements of farming. Then their nearest neighbor, an elderly, drunken Pennsylvania Dutchman, married a young wife, and Julian became involved with her. In order to escape a worse entanglement, Julian left for college in the East." Book rev.

 home in the wilderness of North Carolina.
 Through all the vicissitudes of a long life,
 the hardships of pioneering, and the loss

 Catherine's fortitude never failed; she was the matriarch of the Campbell clan, and the Scotchiest thing ever heard of. She thought the Promised Land was somewhere

 "A realistic story of farm life in the Middle West told in poetic prose. Marget, second of the three daughters of the Hal-looking back over the ten years of the family's life on the farm, and particularly the last year, when drought, debt, and the knowledge of coming madness, all fed the

 "Against the background of Bruges, Paris and London is told the story of Claud, an English boy, living in confused loneliness with his father and his father's mistress, who finds in Cecil, an English girl of his own age, a young, sensitive wisdom to match and complement his own.
 And though, through the years that follow, their paths cross but briefly, Cecil becomes to Claud a symbol of something unattainable. A pleasant book for the discriminating reader, well-written, with good characterization." Hunting

"A moving story of ordinary people and of the love that was the one stable thing in their uncertain world. Arnold Brand and Doris, the girl he had married nine years before, living in one room in London, existed precariously when one or the other was unemployed. Added to their economic insecurity was their awareness of the threat of war drawing ever nearer;
 their joy in each other was the bright strand in their lives. When Doris' death left him desolate Arnold went to fight in Spain, to preserve freedom in a world in which we might have no part." Bkl.

 "A lay sermon on 'the Vanity of Human wishes,' written when Johnson was in profound sorrow for the death of his mother;
 the most majestic example of his prose.
 Belongs to the philosophic meditations on human destiny, in the form of allegory, dialogue, or fable in which the periodical writers loved to indulge. The prince escapes from his happy valley in quest of a satisfactory object in life, but returns to his paradise again with a sager acceptance of man's limitations." Baker's Best descendants of Dickens' 'Dombey and Son' as they might have become in the second

 Dombey's six children and the sons and

"That both sides were right in the great conflict between the states we have sometimes been told. Here is a book that dares to intimate that both may have been wrong. The story follows 'The long roll' and is a sequel to it in the sense that it carries on the story of two of the characters, and that, beginning at Vicksburg, it follows the war to its close. It presents a panoramic view of the movement of armies, and thru it there runs an exquisitely beautiful story of love that is stronger than death." Book rev. digest

"This story has been woven about that little band of English settlers sent by Sir Walter Raleigh from Plymouth in 1587 to settle in Virginia, under the governorship of John White. Their first settlement on Roanoke island was destroyed by unfriendly Indians and they retreated from the shore to the mountains, under the protection of the friendly Croatan tribe. Virginia Dare, the first child born in the colony, is the heroine of the romance. Captured by the Shawnees, who spared her on account of her beauty and made her the prophetess of the tribe, she was finally rescued by her lover, Miles Darling." Book rev. digest

Prisoners of hope; a tale of colonial Virginia Houghton 1898 378p front $2.50

"Romance of Virginia, (ca.1649-51) when the colony was seething with disaffection caused by the sending of rebels to the plantations. The hero, one of the convicts sold into this slavery, joins in a rising against the Government. His love for his master's daughter leads to a series of sensational events. Much description of the landscapes and the stately homes of Virginia." Baker's Best

Slave ship. Little 1924 330p o.p. 1941

"An historical novel of the eighteenth century slave trade. The hero, David Scott, was a young Jacobite whose activities in the Stuart cause had brought him into prison, from which he was later taken and sent in shackles to Virginia to be sold into slavery. After some years he made his escape and embarked on a slave trader which trafficked between the African slave coast and the colonies. His conscience revolted, but circumstances made him captain of the ship and kept him in the evil trade. The novel is not only a most graphic account of the horrors of the slave ship and the tragedy of human slavery, but a searching of a man's soul." Book rev. digest

"A novel of Iceland and Greenland in the tenth century, written by an Icelander. It is based on the sagas, and the main story is one of adventures and colonizing across the seas—first in Greenland, then in Labrador. A minor theme is the introduction of Christianity, bringing disension with it. Eric the Red, discoverer of Greenland, and his son Lief the Lucky, are the chief characters, but a host of others appear in the long, detailed story." Bkl.

* Arouse and beware. Coward-McCann 1936 332p $2.50

"A fast-moving, readable adventure story with a Civil war background. Two Yankee prisoners in 1864 escape from the Belle Isle prison camp and are joined by chance by an unknown young woman who is escaping from Richmond for reasons of her own. The exciting details of the escape are very real; the characters are less clear." Bkl.

Long remember; decorations by Will Crawford. Coward-McCann 1934 411p $2.50

"The town of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, is going about its daily life on a day in July, 1863. Daniel Bale has just come home from the west to bury his grandfather, and has fallen in love with his neighbor's wife. Troops are drilling on the village green, but war is far away—something to be talked about. And then suddenly, with little warning, they are overwhelmed, engulfed in a battle. A powerful novel that makes it all very real." Wis bul.

The noise of their wings. Coward-McCann 1938 240p $2.50 (W)

Romance of Rosy Ridge; with illus. by Will Crawford. Coward-McCann 1937 96p illus $1.25 (W)

"Just after the Civil war, when the fighters were struggling home to Rosy Ridge, Missouri, along came Henry Bohun, playing sad tunes on a comb and charming the MacBean family down to the last hound dog. It was a time when men were judged by the color of their trousers—Grey or Yankee blue—but Henry's were so faded no one could distinguish their color. At a play party it came out that Henry was an ex-Yankee soldier and thus no mate for Lissy Ann MacBean. But when the bushwhackers came riding, it was Henry who saved the MacBeans and his own happiness." Book rev digest

Melanie; (tr. by June Head). Modern age 1940 313p $2.50

"Study of jealousy, as evidenced in the character of a rich, young central European widow. She traps a weak, unambitious young philosophy student into marrying her, and then proceeds to exert all her evil propensities. Her husband's unhappiness drives him to seek solace with a wholesome young woman, and the outcome is tragedy." Book rev. digest

Kaye-Smith, Sheila, 1888-

Ember lane; a winter's tale. Harper 1940 363p $2.50 (W)

The story of a group of people who fell suddenly under the shadow of an old tragedy. The scene is laid in Sussex, England. "What gives the book its force is the realistic picture of the countryside. It lacks the simplicity, perhaps, of 'Joanna Godden,' and therefore is less powerful. But it has vitality and an earthy strength. It is good, solid work in the field of stark realism." The George and the Crown. Dutton 1925 361p $2.50

"The George and The Crown were rival inns which faced each other across the street of Bullockdean. The story is chiefly concerned with Dan Sheather, son of the landlord of The George. He and Ernley Munk, son of the rival innkeeper, were fast friends and in love with the same girl, Belle Shackford. After Belle had been betrayed and cast off by Ernley, she turned apathetically to Dan, but dismissed him when Ernley later offered her marriage. Faithful Dan, heart-broken, ran away to Sark, his mother's home. There he married out of pity, a little French girl and unexpectedly found perfect happiness. But only for a year." Book rev. digest

Gipsy wagon; the story of a ploughman's progress. Harper 1933 352p $2.50

"A story of the destruction of long established patterns of life in rural England, when post-war economic conditions and farm legislation forced landed proprietors to break up their estates. Fred Sinden was a ploughman, as his father had been, and he expected to live all his days on the same farm. When reverses came he became an itinerant worker, living in a caravan, losing gradually his preference for a settled life and steady work, and clinging by choice to his gipsy existence with its independence and changing scene." Bkl.

Green apple harvest. Dutton 1921 312p $2.50

"A fictional study of religious experience. Robert Fuller, the arrogant young rake of a farming community, becomes converted and preaches a fiery gospel of repentance along the Sussex highways and hedges." Cleveland

Iron and smoke. Dutton 1928 308p $2.50

"Sir Humphrey Mallard, a land-poor Sussex squire, marries the daughter of a north-country iron-monger chiefly in order to carry on his cherished schemes for agricultural improvements with her fortune. Jenny, the young wife, soon finds that Isabel Hainaker, a beautiful neighbor, has Humphrey's lasting love, but, after his early death, in spite of his barrier the women form a close friendship based on the conviction that he has sacrificed them both to his overweening devotion to his land." Cleveland

* Joanna Godden. Dutton 1922 353p $2

"Theme, the development of an intensely vital and human, faulty but lovable, woman who inherits a prosperous farm on the Sussex marshes and the guardianship of a younger sister. We leave her at 38, unmarried but about to become a mother, 'on the threshold of an entirely new life—her lover, her sister, her farm, her good name, all lost. But the past and the future still were hers.'" Book rev. digest

Rose Deeprose. Harper 1936 409p o.p. 1941

"Rose was the daughter of farmers, and all her life was spent on prosperous Kentish farms. In each period—girlhood, wifehood, and motherhood—she cherished a blind devotion to one person, and each time, she was indirectly responsible for the loved one's death. . . Melodramatic in outline, but told with restraint and plausibility." Bkl.

Shepherds in sackcloth. Harper 1930 379p o.p. 1941

"A novel of quiet beauty and deep feeling. The setting is the Sussex countryside. The shepherds are an old high church clergyman and a young Nonconformist preacher." Cleveland

Summer holiday. Harper 1932 293p o.p. 1941

"The time spent each summer at Flatnix meant days of untold joy to imaginative Selina and her more literal little sister Moira. Through it all there runs the delineation of the children's make-believe by which they escape the confines of adult authority only to seek again its shelter when their imaginings cause terror and feelings of insecurity." "At its beginning, its one dominant character is fifteen years of age. At its end he is eighty-five. Its action opens at Boarzell in Sussex, five miles from the seacoast town of Rye, in 1885. It closes at the same place in 1905. During the interval a new England of the twentieth century has grown out of the England of the nineteenth century, but Reuben Backfield remains unchanged." Book rev. digest

Tamarisk town. Dutton 1920 393p o.p. 1941

"A striking novel which depicts the warfare between the two ruling passions of a man's life his love for a woman and his desire to transform his native Sussex village into a beautiful and aristocratic seaside resort. The story seems to show that there is also a conflict in the author's mind between the desire to paint a full-length portrait of the hero—the story covers the last forty years of the nineteenth century—and to recreate a place and period, her Victorian Margate (Tamarisk Town) is even more convincing than her characters." Cleveland

Valiant woman; a novel. Harper 1938 386p $2.50 (W)

In this novel "depicting life in a Sussex village, the author weaves together the stories of two families of the landed gentry, of the villagers whose lives are deeply rooted in the soil, and of the outsiders who have come to live in the recently developed Trulilows estates." Baldwin

Village doctor. Dutton 1929 266p $2.50

"More than fifty years ago when Sussex farmers brewed their ale at home and kept the haymaking and sheep-shearing as solemn feasts, a young London doctor left his work in a great hospital to take up his practice in the little farming village of Speldham. Induced by his loneliness Philip Green married a daughter of one of the more prosperous farmers, who, to satisfy her ambition, deserted her village sweetheart for Philip. Here in this quiet novel is told the story of this devoted doctor, whose simple goodness won the hearts of his patients and finally softened the hard heart of his wife." Book rev. digest

Hard money. Harper 1930 474p o.p. 1941

"The career of Jan Van Horn, son of a Dutch peddler, who became one of the greatest and most trusted financial leaders in young New York. Inspired by a vision of the country's future, Jan worked to acquire 'hard money' (as distinguished from the script issued by state banks) and to build up a banking house which, by backing transportation enterprises, would aid the development of the United States. Many noted people appear, including Jefferson, Jackson, Vanderbilt, and Van Buren." Cleveland

Jealous house. Harper 1934 299p o.p. 1941

"This third novel carries on the story of the Van Horn family begun in 'Hard money' and 'Gold'. Jan Van Horn III carries on the tradition and is true to the great banking house founded by his grandfather but in 1914, when he foresees its end, he is glad, for it has ruled his life like a tyrant. A good novel with a background of business and politics from Cleveland's first administration to the world." Wis. bul.

"As in 'The constant nymph' the author writes about the children of a genius.
William and Emily Crowne, twins, are the children of an erratic, gifted poet whose trial for murder and whose acquittal of the nineties. The twins are the most natural, the gayest, and the most brilliant young things London has seen, yet all society awaits the fulfillment of their

"A week-end at a country house is the occasion for a gathering of sophisticated Londoners—authors, critics, and restless, dissatisfied women. Hugo Pott, overworked at living up to his reputation as a genial, popular dramatist, is the central figure, and his whole life will presumably take a different turn after the shock of learning from the youngest member of the party that his plays are old-fashioned, his career unnecessary, and what he really needs is sleep. The book, like the characters, has an effect of cleverness and a suspicion of futility." Bkl.

"This western story boasts the usual combination of villainy, nobility, and strategy. The heroine, a noble mountain girl, is a forest ranger in the Siskiyou. She encounters a series of terrific adventures in which the conflict between right and wrong ends inevitably with confusion to the wrong. In the end, she is united in marriage to an equally noble hero, with happiness insured by a million-dollar wedding gift." Bkl.

First published 1918 by Doubleday

"A tale of the timber regions of California. John Cardigan comes to the unbroken redwood lands of Humboldt county, fells the first giant redwood tree, founds a flourishing industry and the town of Sequoia. Late in life he marries; after three years his wife dies and leaves him an infant son. . . [The son] is educated in an eastern college, spends two years in Europe, and returns to Sequoia to find selfish money makers there, slowly and deliberately undermining the work of his father's life-time. A bitter fight ensues in which Bryce risks even his chance for love and happiness." Book rev. digest

Silbermann; tr. from the French by Brian

Lunn. Liveright 1923 191p o.p. 1941

"A much discussed and widely translated French novel concerned with anti-Semitism as it manifests itself in a French school for boys. Silbermann is a Jewish youth of high aspirations and keen intellect who from the moment of his entrance into the school is subjected to the persecution of his schoolmates. He is befriended by one only among them, an idealistic Protestant who becomes his staunch defender and who is the narrator of the story. The situation is most skilfully used to bring out not only the strength and bitterness of the race antagonism but at the same time the qualities of the Jew which arouse it. At the close of his stormy career at the lycée Silbermann, thoroughly disillusioned and convinced that he cannot make any headway against race prejudice, goes to America with the determination to make money as the only opportunity left him." "A lovely idyll of the Navajo country.
Laughing Boy, cunning artificer of silver and maker of songs, loves Slim Girl who, tainted and embittered as the result of her American schooling, is trying to find her way back into the heart of her people.
The story tells how together they fared along the Trail of Beauty, the final tragedy leaving Laughing Boy bereft but not despairing." Cleveland

"A sea story of the War of 1812. For three years the brig Glimpse, sailing from Chog's Cove, Rhode Island, with priva-teer's papers, had harried British shipping in the Caribbean. When the story opens she has just captured a wealthy prize but unfortunately under dubious circumstances. The captain puts a small crew on board the captured boat and subsequently the two are separated in a storm. The story then relates the adventures and wanderings of the various members of both crews, reaching its climax with the arrival of all the survivors at the home port." Book rev. digest
